money was paid because some of the cases which have been referred to speak of goodwill, and goodwill has been referred to in the agreement. I think that the affidavit of the valuer of the company shows exactly for what the money has been paid. He says that he was instructed by the company to investigate and report to them upon the value of the Running Horse licensed property for the purpose of submitting their claim for compensation to the compensation authority. He valued the Running Horse as it was and he valued the house as it would be, and he assessed the compensation on the footing of the difference, and, though he speaks of loss of profits, depreciation in value of fixtures, and loss of rent, because the premises would not be rentable at so high a figure in the future, what he has contemplated plainly according to his own statement is the difference in value of this property as a licensed house and the value of it as an unlicensed house, or worse than that, a house to which in future no licence ought to attach. That runs through the rest of the affidavit, and all that he did was on instructions to agree the amount of compensation which in this case was rather less than was paid —the sum was eventually fixed at £1,133 as being the amount to be paid to those who represent the company, either the company themselves or those claiming through them. If that is a correct view, what does this money represent? In my opinion, it represents not the whole of the property, because the property remains, but the value of the property with this restriction placed upon it, just the same as if there had been a restriction against building or any other restriction of a like nature. It is now a property which, until another licence is granted—which may be regarded as an unlikely event—cannot now be used for the purposes of a licensed victualler, and must, therefore, be used for other purposes, and the whole of the compensation money represents the difference between the value of the house as it stands and the value of the house as it stood before the intervention of the licensing authority. If that is so, it is impossible, it seems to me, to see how it could go otherwise than to those to whom the property belongs. The property belongs to the mortgagor and the mortgagees between them—that is to say, the mortgagor, the company, own the property subject to rights of the mortgagees. It is never safe to push an analogy very far, but the analogy of a purchase under compulsory powers is very close to the facts which have occurred here. It might have been a purchase under the Lands Clauses Act, or under some such Act as Michael Angelo Taylor's Act. I am not sure that there is any other Act that enables a compulsory purchase to be made, but all those Acts are embodied in the Lands Clauses Act as convenient machinery. Although neither the Lands Clauses Act, nor Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, nor any other special Act applies to this case, the proper authority is entitled, under the Licensing Act, 1904, to say: "You shall lose certain advantages in your house, and for that you are to be paid." There is, in fact, a compulsory purchase of part, not a physical part, of the premises but of some of the value attached to the premises, in that there is now a restriction placed on the use of them. This money is really part of the house. I do not think that it can be called goodwill in any sense. If it is goodwill, it is goodwill attached to the house. The money is for every purpose a part of the house. I am not now saying that the mortgagees are entitled to it. I am now only considering whether the mortgagors are entitled to money which represents a house which they have assigned away. It seems to me impossible to say that the mortgagor is entitled to it, because it is not his property. He did not, of course, intend that the mortgagee should receive his money, nor did he contemplate it. The mortgagor is not entitled to say "This is my money." It is attached to the house, and the house belongs to the mortgagees. The only possible way, it seems to me, of putting it, and the only way in which it has been put, is this, that the deed contemplates a floating charge. That is so, and I need not go into the character of the floating charge. For the present purpose it is well known what it means. The floating charge is contained in clause 8, and the first observation which I make upon that clause is that this particular property is excepted from the floating charge. The charge in favour of the trustees represents, not the leasehold property which has been specifically assigned, but all their other property, and everthing in that clause which refers to a floating charge deals with property other than that specifically assigned or demised to the trustees. There is no floating charge upon that. Then they say, if we get it then the floating charge will attach. I agree, but the fact that there is a floating charge upon their property does not entitle the mortgagors to have it, though if they did receive it it would be subject to the floating charge. The company cannot use the argument of a floating charge in order to enable them to get what would be subject to the floating charge if they got it. The right of the trustees supervenes and prevents their getting it. But then, that being so, the practical difficulty is, what is to be done with the money? The trustees are mortgagees in this way, that they hold this property, including the proceeds of sale, as a security for money which is not yet due. They are therefore not entitled to receive it and reduce the amount of their mortgage; their rights have not accrued for that purpose. On the other hand, it seems to me that they are not entitled to use it in any way. If the deed had contemplated what happened, no doubt some provision might have been made for that, but I find that they are in that position that the mortgagors cannot receive it, that the mortgagees are the only legal hands to receive it, and the mortgagees cannot use it when they have got it. Now, the only thing that I can do is to decide this question on principle. None of the provisions in the deed assist me at all, because, though there are elaborate provisions for dealing with the property arising from sales under clause 23, this case does not arise in that way, but is entirely independent of the deed altogether, and therefore it seems to me the deed applies in principle only. The mortgagees are entitled to receive it, but I think that the mortgagors still being, not so much under the deed, but as a matter of fact in accordance with law, in possession for the moment are entitled to the usufruct of it—that is to say, any money which is yielded by interest from the money placed upon deposit or otherwise invested ought to be paid to the company, the mortgors. There is not much difficulty in expressing that, but what occurs to me as being more difficult is to say how long that is to continue, because at any moment the trustees' right to enter may accrue, at any moment the trustees' powers may come into force. They may be entitled to sell and they may be entitled to exercise the rights of mortgagees in possession, and then, immediately that occurs, and whenever that occurs, although from what I have heard it is not at all likely to occur; at any moment, then, the mortgagees will be entitled to the principal and certainly to the income. The only words that occur to me, giving them such consideration as I could apply, listening to the arguments, are the words "until otherwise determined." It would not do to say "until further order," because the court would not be in a position to make any further order. There will be a declaration that the company is not entitled to this money, that it ought to be paid to the trustees as they are so described in the deed, but that they shall not apply it in reduction of their mortgage debt or otherwise until the security becomes enforceable, and that the company is entitled until that event to any dividends or investments or moneys arising from the investment thereof—investments is a wide term and will include profits.

Further consideration.

This was the hearing on further consideration of a debenture-holder's action.

The company was incorporated in 1900. In July, 1900, it was resolved to raise a sum of £26,250 by the issue of debentures to rank pari passu. In pursuance of this resolution certain debentures were issued prior to the 1st of January, 1901, the date upon which the Companies Act, 1900, came into operation. Other debentures of the same series were issued in 1901. Through inadvertence the debentures issued in 1901 were not registered within twenty-one days of the date of issue as required by section 14 of the Act.

In 1903 an application was made to the court under section 15 of the Act that the time for registration might be extended, and on the 24th of July, 1903, an order was made extending the time for registration until the 14th of August, 1903. This order contained the proviso that "this order is to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such debentures shall be actually registered." These debentures were accordingly registered prior to the 14th of August.

In November, 1903, the company went into voluntary liquidation.

On the 18th of February, 1904, an order in the action was made directing inquiries as to the dates when these debentures were actually registered, and as to which of the unsecured creditors of the company at such dates of registration remained unsatisfied. It was also ordered that Gonzalez, Byass, & Co. (Limited), unsecured creditors, should have liberty to attend on these inquiries.

The question now before the court was to what extent, if any, the rights of unsecured creditors were affected by the order of the 24th of July, 1903, having regard to the proviso contained therein.

Hughes, K.C., Gore-Browne, K.C., and E. Ford, for the debenture-holders.—The proviso to the order of the 24th of July, 1903, only gave rights in the nature of specific charges and did not give priority to unsecured creditors over these debenture-holders: In re Joplin Brewery Co. (Limited), 50 W. R. 75, [1902] 1 Ch. 79; In re Johnson & Co. (Limited), 50 W. R. 482, [1902] 2 Ch. 101; In re Spiral Globe (Limited), 50 W. R. 187, [1902] 1 Ch. 396; and In re S. Abrahams & Sons, 50 W. Badcock, K.C., and Ashton Cross, for the unsecured creditors.—These debentures have no priority over the debts of unsecured creditors existing at the dates of registration of these debentures. The amount which these debenture-holders would have received if the debentures had been registered in accordance with section 14 of the Act, should be divided rateably between the holders of such debentures and the unsecured creditors whose debts existed prior to the dates of registration: In re N. Defries & Co. (Limited), Bowen v. N. Defries & Co. (Limited), 52 W. R. 253, [1904] 1 Ch. 37, and In re Anglo-Oriental Carpet Manufacturing Co., 51 W. R. 634, [1903] 1 Ch. 914.

Younger, K.C., and Austen, for the directors and the holders of the earlier debentures.

JOYCE, J., in giving a considered judgment, said: This case raises a question as to the meaning and effect of the conditions imposed in the order for enlarging the time for the registration of debentures not registered within twenty-one days as required by section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900 The form of the proviso or condition is taken from what is now the common form which was settled by the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Johnson & Co. (Limited). There are indications in the report of that case that the form of the proviso previously used was altered possibly with a view to this very question, and it is intended to prevent the registration of debentures under section 15 from affecting the position of creditors whose debts accrue prior to the date when such registration is actually effected. It is clear that such a proviso debars these debenture-holders from taking priority over persons who were unsecured creditors prior to the date of registration, and it is impossible to differ from the judgment of Buckley, J., in In re Anglo-Oriental Carpet Manufacturing Co. The fact that in that case a winding up had occurred before the date of registration makes no difference.

Therefore the creditors whose debts had been incurred before the actual date of registration take pari passu with the debenture-holders registering under the order, the share of the assets which such debenture-holders would have taken if their debentures had been duly registered in accordance with section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900. Will—Tenant for life and remainderman—Residuary personalty—Covenant to pay life annuities—Capital and income—Apportionment.

A testator directed that his residuary estate should be held on trust for a life tenant and a remainderman. He had covenanted to pay certain annuities.

Held, that each instalment of the annuity should be apportioned between capital and income, according to the value of the life estate and the reversion as ascertained at the time of the testator's death.

Yates v. Yates, 28 Beav. 637, followed.

Originating summons.

Robert Dawson, by his will dated the 5th of August, 1897, devised and bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust to sell the same and to stand possessed of the residuary trust moneys and the investments, in trust to pay the income to his wife, L. Dawson, one of the defendants. And he declared that after her death the capital of the trust funds should be held in trust for his children. And if there should be only one child the whole to be in trust for that one child.

The testator died on the 11th of February, 1903, and left the defendant Mrs. Dawson, and one child only, the defendant R. Dawson, an infant.

The testator had covenanted to pay J. H. Arathoon an annuity by two equal half-yearly payments, and, further, that if J. D. Arathoon should survive his father, J. H. Arathoon, that the testator should pay J. D. Arathoon an annuity from the death of his father. Both the annuitants were living.

The estate, after clearing debts and legacies other than the annuity debt, was £3,900

This summons was issued to determine the following questions:

Whether or not the annuities covenanted to be paid by the testator ought to be provided for entirely out of the capital of the testator's estate by means of half-yearly sales of a sufficient portion of the investments thereof?

If the said annuities ought not to be provided for entirely out of capital, then ought the same to be provided for partly out of income and partly out of capital, and in the proportion which the value of the life estate of the defendant L. Dawson in the testator's estate bears to the value of the reversion of the defendant R. Dawson in the said estate at the time of payment, or in some other and what proportion?

Dighton Pollock, for the tenant for life.—The sum payable each year ought to be paid out of capital, the tenant for life thus bearing only the interest.

He referred to In re Bacon, 41 W. R. 478, 62 L. J. Ch. 445.

Bryan Farrer, for the remainderman.

The following cases were referred to: Allhusen v. Whittell, L. R. 4 Eq. 295, 15 W. R. Ch. Dig. 122; In re Harrison, 38 W. R. 265, 43 Ch. D. 55; In re Muffett, 37 W. R. 9, 39 Ch. D. 534; Yates v. Yates, 28 Beav. 637.

SWINFEN EADY, J., stated the facts and said: How ought the payment to the annuitant to be borne as between the tenant for life and the remainderman? The tenant for life is tenant for life of the clear residue. The covenants are obligations, though indefinite, and in the case of the second annuity the covenant is contingent. [He referred to Fletcher v. Stevenson, 3 Hare 360; Allhusen v. Whittell, and Yates v. Yates.] A separate calculation for each instalment would be beyond the capacity of ordinary trustees, and would necessitate constant professional assistance and would be highly inconvenient. On the other hand, if the proportion were fixed once and for all according to the value of the life estate and the reversion at the testator's death, the expense would be less and the result practically the same. I will follow Yates v. Yates and direct the successive payments to be apportioned in that fixed proportion, and to be paid partly out of capital and partly out of income in the proportions which the value of the life interest and the value of the reversion bear to each other on the day of the testator's death.

Company—Directors—Fraudulent prospectus—Action by shareholder—Liability for contribution—Death of director—Actio personalis—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3.

A director of a company, who has become liable to make payments under the provisions of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is entitled to recover contribution from the estates of directors who have died since the issue of a prospectus containing untrue statements.

Action.

This was an action brought by certain directors of the London and Northern Bank (Limited) against their co-directors for a declaration that the defendants were liable to contribute to any sums which the plaintiffs or some of them had paid or were liable to pay arising out of the action of Broome v. Speak, 51 W. R. 258, [1903] 1 Ch. 586, and numerous other actions brought against the present plaintiffs or some of them under the provisions of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890.

The directors had issued a prospectus containing untrue statements, and in December, 1901, the action of Broome v. Speak was commenced by a shareholder for compensation for loss sustained. The decision of Buckley, J., that the shareholder was entitled to succeed, was affirmed on appeal both by the Court of Appeal and by the House of Lords: Shepheard v. Broome, 53 W. R. 111, [1904] A. C. 342. The present action was to recover contribution from the defendants.

The defendant Bray had died since action brought, and it had been ordered that it should be continued against his executors. The defendants Simpson, Butler, and Wade were sued as the executors of Gaunt, and Oswald as the executrix of W. W. Oswald.

Astbury, K.C., and Felix Cassel, for the plaintiffs.

Gore-Browne, K.C., and F. Russell, for Gaunt's executors.—This is an actio personalis. The defendant had died, and is therefore not liable: Hughes-Hallett v. Indian Mammoth Gold Mines Co, 31 W. R. 285, 22 Ch. D. 561, and see the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in Finlay v. Chirney, 36 W. R. 534, 20 Q. B. D. 502. The only payment the plaintiffs have become liable to make under the Act is damages; the defendants are therefore not liable to contribute to costs of the various actions.

(a.) Reported by LEONARD T. FORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Danckwerts, K.C., and Kirby, for Bray's executors.

Gatey, for the defendant Gillies.

The other defendants did not appear.

WARRINGTON, J., in delivering a considered judgment, said that the plaintiffs' claim is based on the fifth section of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, which provides: "Every person who by reason of his being a director, or named as a director or as having agreed to become a director, or of his having authorized the issue of the prospectus or notice, has become liable to make any payment under the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment." The liability referred to in that section is that created by section 3, the short effect of which is, "Where, after the passing of this Act a prospectus or notice invites persons to subscribe for shares in a company, every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus or notice, and every person who having authorized such naming of him is named in the prospectus or notice as a director of the company or as having agreed to become a director of the company shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who shall subscribe for any shares, debentures, or debenture stock on the faith of such prospectus or notice for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement in the prospectus or notice, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof, or by reference incorporated therein so issued therewith unless" certain things are proved. What those are, it was not necessary to read. [His lordship then stated the facts at considerable length, and said that the plaintiffs had become liable to make payments under the provisions of the Act, and that Bray and Gaunt would, if living, be liable to make the same payments, and the plaintiffs would be entitled to contribution.]

There is a serious question of law raised by the executors of Bray and Gaunt respectively, as to whether the cause of action against Bray and Gaunt ceased with their deaths. The section provides that a person who has become liable shall be entitled to recover contribution "as in cases of contract" from any other person who if sued separately would have been liable. In cases of contract the right to recover contribution arises (except in cases of express stipulation) not from any notion of implied contract, but as an equitable right springing from the relations of parties as persons liable for the same debt. The right existed from the commencement of those relations, though there might be no means of asserting it by action until one of the parties had met the common obligation, or more than his due proportion thereof, or is, at all events, in imminent danger of being compelled to meet it: see Wolmershausen v. Gullick, [1893] 2 Ch. 514, 41 W. R. Dig. 16, 193, and the cases there cited; also Gerson v. Simpson, 51 W. R. 610, [1903] 2 K. B. 197. The right of contribution existed from the commencement of the relations giving rise to the common obligation—namely, at the time when the shareholder incurred loss by reason of the untrue statement in the prospectus. The argument on the part of the defendants, the executors, founded on the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona therefore failed.

BOSTON FRUIT CO. v. BRITISH AND FOREIGN MARINE INSURANCE CO. (a.)

Insurance—Marine—Charterers—Right of charterers to sue on policy—Intention—Construction of charter-party.

Although the words of a policy are wide enough to include third persons, only those will be included on whose behalf the policy is in fact effected. And where the evidence of such inclusion is to be inferred from the terms used in the charter-party "that the owners shall pay for the insurance of the vessel," this will not be sufficient to enable the charterers to avail themselves of the wide terms of the insurance policy.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (53 W. R. 420, [1905] 1 K. B. 637) affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) (53 W. R. 420, [1905] 1 K. B. 637), affirming judgment of Bigham, J.

The action was brought by charterers against insurers, and the question was whether the charterers, the appellants, were entitled to sue the respondents on a policy of insurance effected by the owners on the steamship Barnstable.

The policy was a time policy from the 21st of March, 1895, to the 20th of March, 1896. There was a running-down clause attached to the policy.

On the 13th of January, 1896, The Barnstable came into collision with a ship The Fortuna, and The Fortuna was sunk. The collision was caused by the negligence of the master and crew of The Barnstable.

On the 15th of January, 1896, the owners of The Fortuna instituted proceedings against The Barnstable in a district court of the United States of America, claiming damages in respect of the collision.

On the petition of the owners of The Barnstable the appellants as charterers were made parties to the suit. At the hearing the liability of The Barnstable was admitted, and damages agreed at 14,575 dols., with interest at 6 per cent. The suit thenceforward proceeded as an independent cause between the appellants and the owners of The Barnstable, to determine which as between them was the party liable to pay the said damages. This question was ultimately decided in the owners' favour by the Supreme Court of the United States. The amount for which the appellants became liable was paid, and the appellants now sought to recover a due proportion of this sum under the policy. The necessary clauses of the charter-party and policy are given in the judgments.

The Court of Appeal upheld Bigham, J., who dismissed the action.

Carver, K.C., and Llewellyn Davies, for the appellants.

Scrutton, K.C., J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Maurice Hill, for the respondents.

Lord LOREBURN, L.C.—In this case the charterers of the steamship Barnstable, who navigated her under a charter-party amounting to a demise of the ship, were held liable in the United States to pay damages to the owners of another ship with which The Barnstable had come into collision. The question now is whether the charterers can recover against the defendant underwriters on a policy not effected by themselves, but effected by brokers instructed by the owners, which includes risk of having to pay damages arising from collision, and contains a description of the assured wide enough to cover the plaintiffs or any others concerned in interest. I have come to the same conclusion as did the Court of Appeal, that this question must be answered in the negative. The substantial contentions of the plaintiffs are as follows: They say that being within the description they are entitled to the benefit of the policy, because the owners were bound to insure, and so must be taken to have insured, charterers' risks by virtue of clause 22 of the charter-party. That clause provides "that the owners shall pay for the insurance on the vessel." In my opinion these words do not so bind the owners, and if an action were brought on such a clause for breach of a contract to insure it must fail. If what is suggested had been meant, nothing would have been easier than to say it. Next, the plaintiffs urge that they are entitled to the benefit of the policy because it must be taken to mean what it says—viz., that all "to whom the subject-matter of this policy does, may, or shall appertain in part or in all" are insured. Now, I agree that a policy may be made for the benefit of all such persons. But where it has been established that in fact the person claiming the benefit was not such a person as those who effected the policy had in contemplation, courts have disallowed his claim though he might be within the description. In the present case the plaintiffs and the assignees of the owners agreed in the course of the American litigation that the former had no insurance on The Barnstable, and the litigation was for a long time conducted by the plaintiffs on the footing that the owners intended to insure their own interest and no other. In reality, this is the only evidence we have in regard to intention. It appears conclusive to show that this appeal must fail.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—In this case an American corporation, who were the charterers of the British steamship Barnstable under a time charter, claim the benefit of a policy effected by the owners in England on the hull and machinery of the vessel. The policy was in a common form, and purported to be made on the proposal of certain insurance brokers "as well in their own names as for and in the name and names of all and every other person or persons" to whom the subject-matter of the policy did, might, or should appertain in part or in all. There was a running-down clause attached to the policy. The Barnstable, owing to the fault of the persons in charge of the navigation, who were the servants of the charterers, ran down and sank another vessel. This disaster gave rise to protracted litigation in America. The Barnstable was condemned in damages, and ultimately it was decided that as between the charterers and the owners the loss must fall on the charterers. Having discharged their liability in respect of the collision, the charterers sue the insurance company in this country. Their contention is that the charter imposed upon the owners an obligation to insure on behalf of the charterers as well as on their own behalf, or, in the alternative, that the owners were authorized to insure and did in fact insure on behalf of the charterers, or at least in terms wide enough to cover them, and that they had duly ratified and adopted the contract. There is not the slightest evidence of intention on the part of the owners to protect the charterers by insurance, unless such intention can be inferred from the mere fact of the existence of the policy in question taken in connection with the language of the charter. The main part of the argument was addressed to the construction of the charter. There are only three clauses which can have any bearing upon the question. They are clause 3, clause 17, and clause 22. Clause 3 declares that the charterers shall provide and pay for certain specified charges "and all other charges whatsoever" except for painting and repairs to hull and machinery, and anything appertaining to keeping the ship in proper working order. Clause 17, after declaring among other things, that should the vessel be driven into port or to anchorage by stress of weather the detention or loss of time should fall on the charterer, ends with this statement: "It is understood in event of steamer from above causes putting into any port or ports other than those to which she is bound that the charterers are covered as to expenses as the owners are by their insurance." Up to this point there is no reference to insurance to be found in the charter. The next and only other mention of insurance is in clause 22, in the following words: "That the owners shall pay for the insurance on the vessel." Clause 3, if unexplained or unqualified, might possibly have given occasion for an argument to the effect that the expense of insurance was to be borne by the charterers. But clause 22 leaves no room for such a contention. And indeed, as was suggested in the course of the argument, the clause may have been inserted in order to put that matter beyond question. It will be observed that clause 22 does not indicate the amount to be insured or specify the risks to be covered. It merely says that the owners shall pay for the insurance on the vessel. It imposes no obligation on the owners which the charterers could enforce. The meaning, therefore, I think, must be simply this—that if the owners choose to insure they must pay the premiums without recourse to the charterers. The owners are not to trouble themselves about the charterers at all. The insurance contemplated, if effected, is no concern of the charterers. Now, if the matter rested there, it seems to me that the conclusion must be that when the owners proposed to insure, acting as they did without any communication with the charterers, the charterers cannot be regarded as persons within the contemplation of the proposal. They were not persons intended to be covered by the policy or persons for whose benefit the insurance was proposed. They were strangers to the contract altogether. Clause 17 is obscure. Vaughan Williams, L.J., seems to think that under certain circumstances it might give the charterers the benefit of an insurance made by the owners. I cannot think that that can be the meaning. I prefer the suggestion of Mr. Hamilton, that what was meant was only this: That if the charterers should desire protection against the risks contemplated they were to look out for themselves and themselves alone, just as the owners were to do by their insurance on the vessel. If this be the true meaning it would strengthen the view I have already indicated, as the result of clause 22, that the insurance on the vessel was intended to be for the benefit of the insuring owners, and not in any event or under any circumstances for the benefit of the charterers. I am therefore of opinion, notwithstanding the very able argument of Mr. Carver and Mr. Llewellyn Davies, that the order appealed from is right, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Lord ROBERTSON concurred.

Lord ATKINSON.—I concur in the conclusion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be upheld, and this appeal dismissed with costs. I think that clauses 17 and 22 of the charter-party, taken singly or together, do not on their true construction amount to a contract between the owners and charterers that the former should insure the ship, nor do they, in my opinion, impose any duty or obligation on the owners so to do, or constitute or appoint them the agents of the charterers for that purpose. I am further of opinion that whether Messrs. Craggs & Son intended to insure on behalf of the appellants or not, or whether or not Messrs. I. Holman & Son professed or intended to insure on their (the appellants') behalf and as their agents, the appellants, with full knowledge of the facts, repudiated, in the American proceedings, the authority of the persons they now contend acted as their agents, and disclaimed the contract those alleged agents entered into. At p. 37 of the record of the American proceedings a stipulation of facts agreed upon between the appellants and the owners is set forth. Paragraph 8 of this stipulation contains the following statement: "The appellants had no insurance on the said steamship." The excuse now given for this statement is that at the time it was made the appellants were contesting their liability for the damages caused to another vessel by the negligent navigation of The Barnstable; but if their present contention be well founded they were interested in other risks different from, and in addition to, the risk of having to pay damages for injury caused to other vessels by the negligent navigation of the vessel they had chartered. And the contention that unless they were held liable in damages for this collision they had no interest in the policy of assurance, and that while that liability was undetermined this statement in paragraph 8 could not be treated as a repudiation of the authority of their agents, or a reprobation of the contract of assurance which prevents them now from approbating it, cannot, in my opinion, be sustained. At the time this statement of facts was agreed upon the appellants knew all the fa.ts. They insisted, no doubt, upon a construction of the charter-party which would have protected them from liability for the damages then sued for; but the fact that the question of construction was still sub judice, and that they did not know that their contention would fail, or that they would be held liable to pay these damages, may show a want of appreciation of the soundness of a legal argument, or the correctness of a legal opinion, but does not, in my opinion, amount to such ignorance of fact as will entitle a party to escape from the consequences of an election between two remedies made by him while that ignorance continued. I think that the statement in this paragraph 8 must be treated as an unequivocal expression on the part of the appellants of their determination not to adopt or ratify, or be bound by the contract of insurance which has been entered into, and that, though made in a suit between the appellant and a third party, it is upon the authority of Clough v. The London and North-Western Railway Co., L. R. 7 Eq., pp. 26, 34-36, binding in the present case upon those who made it. Upon the true construction of the general clause in the policy of marine insurance so much discussed, I express no opinion. Under the old authorities the governing factor in determining the person or class of persons who came within such a clause, or was or were entitled to ratify the contract contained in it and take advantage of that contract, was apparently the intention, disclosed or undisclosed, existing in the mind of the person who effected the policy with the underwriters at the time he effected it. The underwriter, it would seem, was held to have insured those whom the person who dealt with him intended should be insured, though that intention was never communicated to the underwriter. I doubt very much whether that doctrine can long survive the decision of your lordships' house in Keighly, Maxted, & Co. v. Durant, [1901] A. C. 240, 49 W. R. Dig. 41, or whether the rule of construction they adopted in the case of marine policies from earlier times is not inconsistent with the root principle which lies at the foundation of all the law of contract—namely, that there must always be the consent ad idem of the two contracting minds to make a valid contract. Having come to the conclusion I have mentioned on other points of the case, it is unnecessary for the purposes of this appeal that I should express any opinion upon this point, and I wish to hold myself entirely free, should the necessity arise, to reconsider it upon a future occasion.

BOURNE v. BOURNE. (a.)

Partnership—Lien of executors of deceased partner on the assets of the partnership—Realization of assets—Deposit of deeds by surviving partner—Priorities—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 39.

On the dissolution of a partnership by death, the surviving partner has both a right and a duty to realize the partnership assets for the purpose of winding up the partnership, and this right and duty extend alike to real and personal property of the partnership, the lien of the representatives of the deceased partner extending only to the surplus assets of the partnership, and not attaching to the specific assets so as to prevent the surviving partner giving a good title to a bonâ fide purchaser from him.

This was an appeal from a decision of Farwell, J. (reported ante, p. 154, [1906] 1 Ch. 113).

On the 1st of July, 1873, articles of partnership were entered into between W. T. Bourne and G. Grove.

G. Grove died on the 9th of May, 1901.

A deposit of deeds was made on the 7th of February, 1902, in favour of Messrs. Berwick & Co., bankers, accompanied by a memorandum of deposit signed by W. T. Bourne in the name of "Bourne & Grove." The memorandum related to certain hereditaments which formed part of the assets of the partnership of "Bourne & Grove."

W. T. Bourne died on the 3rd of September, 1902. His estate was insolvent. The overdraft at the bank was then about £4,500.

An action was commenced against Bourne's executors to administer his estate.

By an order dated December, 1903, in the claim of the executors of G. Grove to rank as creditors against the capital which G. Grove had in the business of Bourne & Grove, it was ordered that the executors of G. Grove should be at liberty to prove for £3,000 against the estate of W. T. Bourne and have a lien for the amount of such debt and costs on the assets of the said partnership.

After the death of W. T. Bourne the business was carried on as a going concern and was sold under an order of the 6th of April, 1903, for a lump sum, and the proceeds of sale were paid into court and invested in Consols.

The partnership real estate the subject of the deposit of the 7th of February, 1902, realized about £5,300, and was therefore insufficient to pay both the bankers and G. Grove's executors in full.

On the action coming on for further consideration, Farwell, J., decided that the bankers were entitled to priority in respect of the £4,500.

Stamp, for the parties having the conduct of the action.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L J.—This case turns, I am almost disposed to say, upon a single point. It is admitted by both the learned counsel for the appellant that they cannot deny that when there is a partnership between two partners, and one of those partners dies, unless there is something in the partnership articles to the contrary, primâ facie the surviving partner has not only the right but the duty to realize the partnership property, and for the purpose of that realization to carry on the business if it is necessary so to do for a reasonable realization of the partnership assets. That is not disputed, but it is said that although that is perfectly true with regard to so much of the partnership assets as constitute personal property, it is not true in respect of real property. Now in the first place no case has been produced to us which decides anything of the sort, no case has been produced which excludes the surviving partner from the right to realize and deal with partnership realty for the purpose of paying partnership liabilities. In the next place, so far as the principle is concerned, it is obviously wide enough to cover both personalty and realty. The real truth of the matter is that, leaving out all questions of legal estate and jus accrescendi and anything else of that sort, there is as between a surviving partner and the representatives of a deceased partner an overriding duty to wind up the partnership, and to do all such acts as are necessary for the purpose, and, if it is necessary for the purpose of the winding up either to continue the business, or to borrow money, or to sell assets whether those assets are real or personal; and the right and the duty of such surviving partner are co-extensive. It further appears from the case of In re Clough, to which Mr. Wheeler called our attention, that it cannot be denied in the face of the authorities that, given a debt which was in existence before the dissolution by death, there is the right to sell or pledge the realty. It is not suggested here that the rule does not apply to realty, but it is said that the rule is limited, and that although the surviving partner has the right to raise money on the mortgage of the realty, he can only do it for the purpose of paying particular debts I say again that I cannot find any authority for that proposition. With regard to the proposition stated in p. 166 of Lindley on Partners, which it was argued only applied as between living partners in an existing partnership, it is plain from p. 248 that the same proposition applies to the case where there has been a dissolution of partnership. In those circumstances I think that this part of the argument fails. Then it is said that by the application of the principles, which are the basis of the rule in Clayton's case, this debt must be taken to have been paid, and therefore the bankers cannot rely upon this mortgage, because they ought to have known that, this debt having been paid, the surviving partner had no right to pledge or mortgage the real estate. All that I can say with reference to that is, that as far as the bankers are concerned this was apparently an ordinary winding up, there were payments in and payments out, and both the payments in and the payments out must be taken to have been on account of the realization and winding up. In these circumstances it seems to me that that point also fails. I think, therefore, that the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. When a partner dies and the partnership comes to an end, the surviving partner has a right as well as a duty cast upon him to realize the assets for the purpose of winding up the partnership affairs, including the payment of the partnership debts. It is true that in a general sense the executors or administrators of the deceased partner may be said to have a lien upon the partnership assets in respect of any balance that may come to the deceased partner's estate in respect of his interest in the partnership on taking the partnership account, but that lien is not one which affects each particular piece of property belonging to the partnership so as to affect that property in the hands of any person dealing with the surviving partner in good faith. It is really what you may call a general lien upon the surplus assets, and does not affect each particular piece of property so as to interfere with the right of the surviving partner to deal with the property belonging to the partnership for the purpose of realization, so as to give a good title to persons dealing in good faith with him in respect of such property. The power of the surviving partner, of course, extends to a sale, and it also extends to giving a mortgage on any particular part of the property belonging to the partnership to secure in good faith a partnership debt. That being the general rule, it has been argued in this appeal that for that purpose there is a distinction to be drawn between real estate and chattels. I do not know whether it is intended to draw a distinction between real estate and chattels real, or between real estate and chattels personal and choses in action, but I gather that it is intended to say that so far as concerns real estate, and possibly chattels real, a distinction is to be drawn between them and chattels personal or choses in action. To my mind, when you consider the reasons for the rule that the lien of the deceased partner's executors or representatives does not impede the powers of the surviving partner, those reasons apply equally well to real estate as to leaseholds and choses in action or chattels personal. In fact, they apply to any property which forms part of the partnership assets—as, for example, to a patent or a share in a patent, and no good reason can be suggested, or has been suggested, to my mind, why any distinction should be drawn between real estate and personal. It is to be borne in mind that the interest of the partnership in real estate is of a personal character, because wherever the legal estate may be, whether it is in the partners jointly, or in one partner, or in a stranger, it does not matter, but the beneficial interest in the real estate belongs to the partnership, with an implied trust for sale for the purposes of the partnership, for realization, and for the purpose of giving to the two partners their interests when there has to be a winding up of the partnership and an account taken. So that no real distinction can be drawn between real estate held for partnership purposes and personal estate. There is no more difficulty in dealing with the one than there is in dealing with the other, or any reason why you should give a power to the surviving partner to deal with personal estate and not with real estate. The real estate has nothing to do with it. In the eyes of equity the real estate is mere personalty just as much as a chattel real. That being so, it appears to me that the chief argument of the appellants here, that a distinction ought to be drawn in their favour because the property charged was real estate, entirely fails.

Then the only question remaining is this: Was the debt to the bank which the surviving partner gave the charge to secure, one that really to the knowledge of the bank was not a partnership debt? To my mind the bank was entitled to consider and treat it as a partnership debt. The account with them was a partnership account. It was continued under the partnership name and apparently for the purposes of the partnership, and it appears to me impossible to say that it is not or may not be reasonably necessary for the surviving partner to continue the partnership account for the purpose of winding up the estate. To my mind the case is very much as if the only change in the account had been to put the account of the partnership "in administration," or some wording like that. When you find an account of that kind continued, and it is only continued for something like nine months before the charge is given, the bankers, it appears to me, are entitled, in the absence of evidence showing the contrary, to assume and to be credited with the belief that the surviving partner is continuing for the purpose of realization, and that when sums are paid into that account and drawn out of that account all is done for the purposes of the partnership. That being so, in this case, when the account is finally taken and there is a balance due which the bankers are entitled to believe and to assert was, so far as they were concerned, a partnership debt in respect of which they were entitled to have security given, which this surviving partner gave, it appears to me that in these circumstances from any point of view, the charge given was one which it was within the power of the surviving partner to give, and that accordingly the bankers have a right in respect of that charge which is superior to any claim by the executors of the deceased partner in respect of their lien.

MOULTON, L.J. — I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that the powers and duties of a surviving partner with regard to the realization of the partnership estate spring from the very nature of the partnership and its relationship to the world outside, and are quite independent of the nature of any particular property which may be owned by the partnership. I cannot help thinking that a good deal of confusion in this case has arisen from the phrase that the deceased partner has a "lien on the surplus assets of the firm." I doubt whether "lien" is the word which best describes his right. It is not a lien on any specific property existing at the date of the death such as would fetter its realization or conversion into money, but the right is really a claim against the surplus assets after realization, whether those surplus assets consist entirely of the proceeds of realization, or whether they include some specific property which existed at the date of the death. As soon as you get your surplus the lien attaches. Until you get your surplus there is no claim or lien which in any way affects the power and duty of the surviving partner to realize the property of the partnership and to discharge its liabilities.

In re PARDOE, DECEASED.
MCLAUGHLIN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Will— Construction— Charity — Gift for ringing of church bells—Gift for headstones in churchyard—Gift to "public charities and institutions."

A testatrix by her will made (inter alia) the following bequests: The sum of £1 to be paid to the bellringers of a parish church to ring a peal annually "in commemoration of the happy restoration of the monarchy to England"; the income of the sum of £700 to be applied in the erection and maintenance of headstones on the graves of certain poor persons buried in the churchyard; and a gift of residue "to and amongst such public charities and institutions" as her trustees should think fit.

Held, that each of these gifts constituted a good and effectual charitable bequest.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons taken out by the executors and trustees of the will of Mrs. E. M. Pardoe to determine the validity of certain charitable bequests given by the will.

The testatrix by her will dated the 11th of May, 1901, bequeathed (inter alia): (a) The sum of £200 to the vicar and churchwardens of the parish of Cirencester, to be invested by them in the names of the official trustees of charitable funds, and the income thereof to be distributed annually at Christmas as to the sum of £1 to the ringers for the time being of the parish church who should ring a peal of bells from six to seven o'clock in the forenoon on each 29th day of May in commemoration of the happy restoration of the monarchy to England and as to the residue among the poor as therein mentioned. (b) The sum of £700 to the vicar and churchwardens of Cleeton St. Mary to be similarly invested and the income to be applied (inter alia) in the erection and maintenance of headstones to the graves of any persons who at the date of their death were resident as pensioners at the almshouses at Cleeton erected by the testatrix's late husband, and who should be buried in the churchyard of the said church. (c) The net proceeds of her residuary estate to her trustees upon trust to distribute the same to and amongst such public charities and institutions or for such charitable purposes for the public advantage or benefit as her trustees for the time being should in their absolute discretion consider worthy and fitting objects to receive the same.

The testatrix died on the 15th of July, 1903, and her said will was duly proved by the executors therein named.

With regard to the gift of £200 to the vicar and churchwardens of the parish of Cirencester:

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Methold, for the next-of-kin.—This gift is not for a charitable purpose.

R. J. Parker, for the Attorney-General.—If this gift is in aid of the church service it is good, but if it is for the ringing of a peal of bells in commemoration of a political event it cannot be a gift for a charitable purpose.

Jennings, for the vicar and churchwardens of Cirencester.—This is a good charitable gift. It falls within the classification made by Lord Macnaghten in The Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel, [1891]

(a.) Reported by H. WOLCOTT WARNER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. C. 531. It is a gift for religious purposes, and therefore good: In re Scowcroft, [1898] 2 Ch. 638, and Attorney-General v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. sen. 534.

KEKEWICH, J., in giving judgment, said: The bells are to be rung on each 29th day of May, the anniversary of the restoration of the monarchy to England, in commemoration of that event. As I understand it, the object of the gift is that the restoration of the monarchy may be brought to the mind by the ringing of the bells. The restoration was a happy event, and the idea of the testatrix was to bring back happy thoughts, and these happy thoughts necessarily connote gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts, and therefore the ringing of the bells should move the hearers to gratitude to heaven. If that is so it is a good charitable gift. It is also a good gift inasmuch as the ringing of the bells connotes the idea of worship. Therefore I hold that this gift is a good and valid bequest.

With regard to the gift of £700 to the vicar and churchwardens of Cleeton St. Mary:

Fischer-Williams, for the vicar and churchwardens of Cleeton St. Mary.—This is a good gift. It is for the purpose of providing poor persons with the usual funeral necessities, and therefore is charitable. The test is whether the person is benefited in his capacity as a poor person: In re Vaughan, Vaughan v. Thomas, 35 W. R. 104, 33 Ch. D. 187, and In re Manser, Attorney-General v. Lucas, 53 W. R. 261, [1905] 1 Ch. 68.

R. J. Parker, for the Attorney-General.—There is no reason why this gift should not be good charitable gift.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Methold, for the next-of-kin.—If this gift is held to be a good charitable gift the principle will be extended further than it has ever been carried before. Such a gift is not for the benefit of the persons over whose graves the headstones are erected. There is no obligation upon anyone to erect or to maintain headstones upon the graves of deceased persons. This gift is really for the benefit of the relations of those who die in the almshouses. It has been held that a gift to plant flowers on a grave is not a good charitable gift. It cannot be for the benefit of the public to erect headstones, which, in fact, are not necessary for a grave.

KEKEWICH, J., in giving judgment, said: I have before me a passage in the judgment of Warrington, J., in In re Manser, Attorney-General v. Lucas, where he says: "Now, in my opinion, a gift of money for the purpose of providing, or, as in this case, for the purpose of keeping in good order a burial-ground, though that burial-ground may not be a parish churchyard, and though it may be connected with the meeting-house of or for the benefit of members of a particular religious community, may be supported as a gift for the advancement of religion, and therefore a good charitable gift"; and later he says, referring to a decision of North, J.: "To put it shortly, I do not see any difference between a gift to keep in repair what is called 'God's House' and a gift to keep in repair the churchyard round it, which is often called 'God's acre' That is the ground upon which I think this, as I have already said, can be decided in favour of the legacy" The only answer to that is this, that a gift to erect headstones is not a gift for the repair of a churchyard, partly because headstones are not necessary, and partly because they have fallen into disuse. In one sense everything is unnecessary. It is only necessary to cover a grave over decently. But the object of a headstone is to show whose the grave is, and also to make it neat. As regards its use, if headstones really are abandoned because the authorities will not allow them to be erected, this charity will have to be administered cy-près, but in the meantime I venture to think that headstones have not fallen into such disuse as to render a gift to mark a grave with the name and age of the deceased not a charitable gift.

With regard to the residuary gift to the plaintiffs:

Lawrence, K.C., and Methold, for the next-of-kin.—This trust is too vague. The testatrix has in effect delegated the making of the will to the executors: Grimond v. Grimond, [1905] A. C. 124, 53 W. R. Dig. 184; In re Allen, Hargreaves v. Taylor, 54 W. R. 91, [1905] 2 Ch. 400. The words "public charities and institution," imply that "institutions" may include objects not charitable in their nature.

Parker, for the Attorney-General.—If a gift is partly to objects not charitable it fails as being too vague, but here there is clearly a charitable intention, and if there is a public institution which is not charitable it would receive nothing. There is, therefore, a good charitable bequest: Blair v. Duncan, 50 W. R. 369, [1902] A. C. 37; Hunter v. Attorney-General, 47 W. R. 673, [1899] A. C. 309.

Methold replied.

Stewart Smith, K.C., and Cann appeared for the executors.

KEKEWICH, J., in giving judgment, said: It is not my intention to determine the question whether a public institution is necessarily a charity, nor is it incumbent upon me to do so in the case before me. As is usual in cases of this kind, the first thing to do before applying the law, is to see what the meaning of the will is. [After reading the terms of the bequest, his lordship continued:] Now, what is the class marked out by this bequest as the area of selection by the trustees, or is there such a class at all? It seems to me that the will is not framed accurately, yet there is a distinct expression of the testator's intention that the selection shall be made from a particular class, and that the class is described with sufficient accuracy. In the first place, I think the gift is to "public charities" and "public institutions," for I have no doubt that the word "public" attaches to "institutions" as well as to "charities." The testatrix said "public charities and institutions," not "public charities or institutions." She did not divorce charities from institutions, but treated them as being connected together and as being both public. Then the gift goes on "or for such charitable purposes for the public advantage or benefit," &c. In my opinion it is impossible to construe that language as comprising anything that is not charitable, and if the trustees could select a public institution which is not charitable they would, in doing so, be doing what the will did not allow. I think that charity must really govern their selection.

If this is the true view of the case, it is not necessary to distinguish this case from Grimond v. Grimond, because the House of Lords could not have intended to depart from their own decision in Blair v. Duncan, where Lord Davey said: "If, therefore, the words in the present case were merely 'charitable purposes' or were 'charitable and public purposes,' I think effect might be given to them, the words in the latter case being construed to mean charitable purposes of a public character." That is entirely consistent with the rule that a testator may bequeath his property to charity, leaving his executors to ascertain to what precise charity the property should be applied. It would be a most mischievous thing to cast any doubt on gifts of this character because it is a very common form of charitable gift. In Grimond v. Grimond, which comes from Scotland, the residue was to be divided "among such charitable or religious institutions or societies" as the trustees might select, and in Scotland a gift for religious purposes is not necessarily a gift for charitable purposes. The Lord Chancellor did not pause to consider how far the gift was charitable, but said that the testator had not sufficiently described for himself amongst what objects the property was to be distributed; in fact, that he had not given a class at all. The Lord Chancellor thought it impossible to give effect to a gift in that case, because no court could see what the testator meant. That decision has no application to the present case, and in my opinion the gift of residue in this case is a good and effectual charitable gift.

On a petition presented by the Lees Brook Spinning Co. for confirmation by the court of a special resolution for reduction of its capital by repaying to its members £1 10s. per share, the shares to be reduced to £2 each and £1 per share to be deemed to be paid up, a question arose as to the proper form of minute, having regard to the decision of Buckley, J., in In re Calgary and Edmonton Land Co., [1906] 1 Ch. 141.

Held, that an order confirming the reduction could be made, although the £1 10s. per share had not been returned, and that the proper minute to approve for registration was one which, after stating the reduced capital, contained the words "at the time of the registration of this minute the sum of £1 and no more is proposed to be deemed to have been paid up on each share."

In re Calgary and Edmonton Land Co. not followed.

Petition for reduction of capital.

The capital of this company consisted of £80,000 in 16 000 shares of £5 each, of which £2 10s. per share was paid up.

The company had passed a special resolution for the reduction of its capital to £32,000 in 16,000 shares of £2 each—£1 per share to be deemed to be paid up—by returning to the shareholders the sum of £1 10s. per share, and now presented a petition to the court in the usual way for confirmation of the reduction.

The form of minute proposed to be registered, pursuant to section 15 of the Companies Act, 1867, was in the ordinary form, and stated that "at the time of the registration of this minute the sum of £1 has been and is to be deemed to be paid up on each of the said shares." No part of the £1 10s. per share had in fact been returned when the petition was presented.

R. J. Parker, for the company—The difficulty as to the form of the minute has been caused by the decision of Buckley, J., in In re Calgary and Edmonton Land Co., [1906] 1 Ch. 141. The learned judge held there that the court ought not to make the order approving the minute stating the reduced capital until the capital had actually been reduced by the repayment, and he accordingly adopted the following procedure: he first made an order confirming the reduction, then allowed the further hearing of the petition to stand over in order that an affidavit might be supplied showing that the repayment had been made, then post-dated the order, referring therein to the affidavit and approving a minute stating the capital as reduced by the order. There is no necessity for that procedure; moreover, by section 9 of the Companies Act, 1867, no resolution for reduction of capital can be acted upon until the order of the court has been registered, and by section 15 of the same Act registration cannot be made until the minute has been approved and a copy produced to the registrar. Section 16 provides that after registration the minute shall be deemed to be substituted for the corresponding part of the memorandum of association of the company. The point is referred to in the 9th edition of Palmer's Company Precedents, Part I., at pp. 1144 and 1145. The form of minute is in the same volume of the same work, at p. 1122, and the material part runs thus: "At the time of the registration of this minute the sum of £ has been and is to deemed to be paid up on each of the said shares." The object of Buckley J., was presumably to bring the facts into exact correspondence with that wording. [SWINFEN EADY, J.—If that means that that sum only has been paid up it is open to the criticism that it is inaccurate. To omit "has been" and say "proposed to be deemed" would seem to meet the objection of Buckley, J.]

His lordship said he would allow the reduction, but that, having regard to the decision of Buckley, J., in the case referred to, he would consider the question and deliver judgment in a few days.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 1.—SWINFEN EADY, J., read the following judgment: This is a petition for confirmation of the reduction of capital, involving a return to the shareholders of £1 10s per share, upon the footing that £1 may be called up again, the shares being reduced from £5 to £2 with £1 paid. Upon the evidence I have no difficulty in making an order confirming the reduction. A question, however, has been raised as to the form of the order and the minute. It has recently been decided by Buckley, J., in In re Calgary and Edmonton Land Co., [1906] 1 Ch. 141, that the court cannot make the order approving the minute stating the reduced capital until the capital has in fact been reduced by the repayment, and that the proper procedure is to make the order confirming the reduction and then allow the further hearing of the petition to stand over until evidence has been produced that the capital to be paid off has actually been returned to the shareholders, and when this has been done to post-date the order confirming the reduction and approving a minute showing, with respect to the capital as altered by the order, the particulars required by section 15 of the Companies Act, 1867, and section 4 of the Companies Act. 1877. That procedure has been objected to in the present case, and it was urged that the company had no right to make any repayment of capital to shareholders until the sanction of the court had been obtained. the order drawn up, passed, and entered, and the minute registered. By the Companies Act, 1867, s. 9, no resolution for reducing the capital of any company is to come into operation until an order of the court is registered by the registrar of joint stock companies, as thereinafter mentioned. Section 15 provides that the registrar, upon the production to him of an order of the court confirming the reduction, and the delivery to him of a copy of the order, and of a minute approved by the court, showing with respect to the capital of the company, as altered by the order, the amount of such capital, shall register the order and minute, and on the registration, the special resolution, confirmed by the order so registered shall take effect. The certificate of the registrar is to be conclusive evidence that the capital of the company is such as is stated in the minute. By section 4 of the Act of 1877 the minute required to be registered is to show, in addition to the other particulars required by law, the amount (if any) at the date of the registration of the minute proposed to be deemed to have been paid up on each share. In my judgment the Acts clearly contemplate that the order of the court and the registration of the minute are to precede any repayment of capital. The resolution for reduction does not come into operation until after order made and minute registered, and the company is not entitled to make any repayment of capital to shareholders except under and in pursuance of an effective resolution for reduction of capital. By section 3 of the Act of 1877 the power to reduce capital includes a power to pay off any capital in excess of the wants of the company. Again, the minute is to show the capital as altered by the order, and the amount "proposed to be deemed to have been paid up on each share." This means the amount which is proposed to be deemed to have been paid up after the alteration of the capital. The Companies Acts do not contemplate two orders being made on a petition for reduction—one a preliminary order sanctioning the reduction, and the other an order approving the minute after the reduction has been carried into effect. Again, great difficulties in practice would arise if there were to be one order drawn up and post-dated after the reduction had been carried out. Some shareholders might be abroad or unable to be found, so that repayment of capital could not be made to them; others, perhaps, dead, without legal personal representatives; possibly disputes existing as to the ownership of other shares; and the Acts do not contain any provisions for dealing with the amount payable to such persons so as to make any particular disposition by the company of the amount of their capital equivalent to repayment to them. Moreover, the company would be paying off capital, not only before the resolution had become effective, but before it was known whether there would be an appeal from the order confirming the reduction. I prefer to adhere to the practice which prevailed before the recent decision of Buckley, J., and which is fully stated in Palmer's Company Precedents (9th ed.), Part I., pp. 1144, 1145, where numerous precedents of orders are referred to. I make the order confirming the reduction in the usual form. The minute will be as follows: "Minute approved by the court. The capital of the Lees Brook Spinning Co. (Limited) is henceforth £32,000 divided into 16,000 shares of £2 each, instead of the original capital of £80,000 divided into 16,000 shares of £5 each. At the time of the registration of this minute the sum of £1 and no more is proposed to be deemed to have been paid up on each share."

BEER v. BEER. (a.)

Divorce—Restitution of conjugal rights—Judicial separation—Withdrawal from cohabitation—Just cause—Habitual drinking habit—Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19), s. 3—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 5.

The wife instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and in answer the husband pleaded that he had just cause for his withdrawal from cohabitation, alleging that the wife was addicted to habits of intemperance to such an extent that she was a drunkard within the meaning of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, and the Licensing Act, 1902. The husband also prayed for a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty.

The Court dismissed the wife's petition and refused the husband's cross-prayer.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the court.

Barnard, K.C., and Stevenson for the petitioner.

Willock, for the respondent.

GORELL BARNES, P., in delivering judgment, said that the case was one of a somewhat unfortunate character—unfortunate because undoubtedly the root of the matter was the root of most cases in this court—drink. The point raised was somewhat new, although the principles to be applied to it were neither difficult nor novel. The petition was one by a wife for restitution of conjugal rights, the husband's answer and defence being that he had just cause for withdrawing from cohabitation, and he further asked to be judicially separated from his wife on the ground of her cruelty. A similar defence had been considered in Russell v. Russell, [1895] P. 315, where the wife's suit for restitution had failed on the ground that her conduct disentitled her to such relief, but the husband's application had also failed, because it was held that the wife's conduct, although sufficient to disentitle her to restitution of conjugal rights, was not sufficient to establish legal cruelty. In Oldroyd v. Oldroyd, [1906] P. 175, also, a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the justification for the husband's withdrawal from cohabitation, however, failed, and in his judgment in that case he (the learned President) had said: "The Court of Appeal, however, does not hold that the court is to exercise a general discretion in granting or refusing a decree of restitution. To go so far would involve a large alteration of the old law, and would confer a discretionary power on the court of far-reaching effect and most difficult to exercise. Indeed, it was not contended that the decision in Russell v. Russell went to this extent. The effect of that case appears to be that in cases where the conduct of the petitioner has led to desertion by the respondent, and has amounted to sufficient cause to disentitle the petitioner to maintain a suit for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the court is now empowered to refuse to pronounce a decree compelling the respondent to return to cohabitation with the petitioner. The truth is that in such cases it has become practically impossible for the spouses to live properly together. I may add that there may be some little inconsistency in holding that a decree for restitution may not be pronounced, and yet that the other party cannot obtain a decree for judicial separation; but that seems to be the result of the case of Russell v.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Russell." These were the principles which had to be applied to the present case; and the question I have to decide is, what were the real facts. It was admitted that on the 4th of January, 1905, the husband had left his wife, and the position taken up by the parties was indicated in the two following letters. On the 30th of January the wife wrote to her husband: "Dear Bob,—It is now nearly four weeks since you left me, and a week since you had the furniture from our home removed, and turned me out into the street, and I really cannot continue to live apart any longer. I think that any little differences we have had in the past ought to be overlooked on both sides and that we should live together again. Will you, therefore, please make immediate arrangements for returning to live with me and making a home for me somewhere? I am quite ready to come at any time.—Your affectionate wife, MAUDE." To this the husband replied on the 1st of February: "My dear Maude,—I know it is four full weeks since I left you and took away with me the children of our marriage, and since which, and even now, you have not made the least inquiry after. It is also as you say a week since I had the furniture removed. I did so happily just in time to save you the trouble and expense of doing so yourself. There are many valuable articles, particularly of silver, I left, now missing. I really will not live with you again. Our differences, unfortunately, have not been, as you are pleased to term them, 'little,' they have been very large and painful and caused solely and only by your own long-continued wilful misconduct, gross cruelty to myself, and neglect (owing to the drunken and dissipated condition you allowed yourself to get in) of all your domestic duties, improperly pledging my credit, spending money to procure drink which I had given you for domestic purposes; indeed, you had brought yourself to such a condition that I was again, after endless suffering, compelled to seek legal advice. The law is such, so I am advised, that for my own protection I was entitled to take the step I did. My solicitor's letter to you of the 5th of January last truly states your condition and my intention. You have had warning after warning, notice after notice, have been forgiven over and over again, begged, prayed, and implored to amend your ways, all to no avail, and now it is too late. Your own brother on the 3rd of January wrote me with reference to yourself: 'About my staying with you, I think it would lead to a "bust up," for as sure as fate I should lose control and let into her. In fact on Saturday evening before you came in I picked her up off the floor and felt inclined to bang her down again. To say I am sorry for you, Bob, is not the word, and you have all our sympathy. God knows you deserve an easier life, for you do your share.' The above is the view of your family as to yourself and myself, and I know all others of our friends agree. You have many times threatened to take your life with poison and razors, and also the children's. My punishment is greater than yours, and you know it. It is more than twelve months back that I then at your earnest request, and relying on your solemn promise after I had left you, again forgave you and returned to live with you. Now, as to the future (I see by your address you are at your mother's), I will allow you £1 per week for your maintenance; I really cannot possibly do more. I have three children to bring up, and to do so properly and as I should wish I could spend upon them all my income; in addition I have to keep myself. My mother and step-father made me a liberal allowance whilst we were together, but things have now changed. I will cause the money at above rate (which is more than I ought to pay), on hearing from you, to be sent you. I have written you fully, and beg you will please accept this as my ultimatum.—Your unhappy husband, BOB." These two letters define pretty clearly the attitude the parties had adopted towards each other; and the negotiations as to a deed of separation having fallen through on the 6th of February, 1905, the wife filed her petition for restitution of conjugal rights, raising the issues, as to the husband's withdrawal from cohabitation on the 4th of January and his continuing refusal to render her conjugal rights. The husband in March filed his answer admitting withdrawal and refusal, and setting out as a "just cause" for so doing a plea obviously framed from the wording of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19), s. 3, which defined a habitual drunkard as "a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is notwithstanding by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself or herself or to others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, and his or her affairs." The Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 5, sub-section 2, provided that "where the wife of a married man is an habitual drunkard as defined by section 3 of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, the married man shall be entitled to apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order under this sub-section, and on any such application the court may make . . . orders containing . . . the following particulars: (a) A provision that the applicant be no longer bound to cohabit with his wife (which provision while in force shall have the effect in all respects of a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty); (b) a provision for the legal custody of any children of the marriage." In one of the earlier letters the husband had suggested that he should take proceedings under the Licensing Act, 1902, but that idea had been abandoned when negotiations were going on for a deed of separation. Those negotiations, however, fell through, and after the suit for restitution of conjugal rights had been commenced it was useless to take proceeding in the police-court. The question which I have to consider is whether the wife's suit could be maintained. I do not think it necessary to determine what the effect would be if a different state of things existed at the present time to that which existed in January, 1905. If such a change of circumstances arose it would be time enough to consider what the effect would be in any suit which might hereafter be brought. This case depended entirely upon the evidence, and the husband having set up a plea of justification, the burden of proof was upon him of establishing it. The wife, while admitting that at times she had indulged to excess, denied that she had done so to the extent suggested by her husband, who she alleged had put forward greatly exaggerated evidence. There were certain broad facts in the case, the first of which was that in January, 1904, a year before the final separation, the husband had been compelled to leave his wife. Why had he in fact done so? His evidence was that it was for the reasons subsequently set out in the letter of the 1st of February, 1905, and because his wife was getting worse and worse, in spite of his efforts to check her habit. There was, however, one very striking piece of evidence, that of Mr. C. J. Smith, the respondent's solicitor. This gentleman's evidence had been submitted to the test of a keen cross-examination by Mr. Barnard, but the result had been that I have placed very great reliance upon Mr. Smith's evidence, as opposed to that of the petitioner's solicitor. His account of the interview which he and his client had had with the petitioner on the 14th of January, 1904, was dramatic. The wife screaming hysterically, drunk, with her eyes glaring, shouting that she would do for herself and her children, that twopence would always enable her to put herself and them out of the world, that she intended to die, that the children would be found on the parents' doorstep, and that she then had poison in her possession. After a time Mr. Smith succeeded in pacifying the lady and in inducing the husband to return to her. If correct, this was a very remarkable incident; and to my mind it was quite in accord with the weight of evidence in the case, which was in favour of the husband's case. The wife had called her mother and brother to support her case, but neither of them had seen her during her married life between 1899 and December, 1904. The brother, now that he was backing up his sister's case, had changed the view he had expressed as to her conduct in his letter of the 3rd of January, 1905, quoted by the respondent in his letter of the 1st of February, 1905. I prefer to accept the view he had formed at the time when the facts were fresh in his mind. Then there was the wife's letter of the 7th of January, 1905, in which she wrote: "I also wish to inform you that on further consideration I am perfectly willing to enter an inebriates' home for treatment, for which you state my husband is willing to pay." She, however, now explained that she had only written that offer in deference to her husband's wishes. One could not, however, conceive such a letter being written unless the writer felt that she was a proper case for such a home. The medical evidence, moreover, was exceedingly strong, showing that in August and September, 1904, this lady was in a condition bordering on delirium tremens; that on Christmas Day she was "dazed through alcohol"; that she was not a fit person to have the care of young children; and that although not certifiable as a lunatic, she was a fit and proper case for an inebriates' home. The result of this evidence showed, although I have not got to so find, that this lady was a person very nearly within the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1902, at the time when this suit was instituted. The evidence was sufficient to show that this lady had for a considerable period been addicted to drink; that the disease was progressive; and that she was at times dangerous to herself, and possibly to her children. Whether or not the husband could have absolutely checked her habit it was impossible to say, for it was very difficult for a man, a stevedore, whose business kept him away from home day and night at the docks, to take stronger steps than this husband had done in personally warning the tradesmen not to supply her with drink. It was almost impossible to stop cases of secret drinking, for if the money supply was cut off women only pawned things to make up the deficiency. The husband complained that married life had become impossible; to this the wife replied that her lapses were due to his conduct in inciting her, who had been brought up a strict teetotaler, to take spirits after her marriage. In my view there was no foundation for such a charge, and her brother's evidence did not add much to the value of being brought up as a strict teetotaler, for admittedly he had on the evening of the 31st of December, 1904, himself lapsed from his strict principles. The wife had further suggested that she had taken to drink to solace her loneliness; but she knew full well that her husband had his duties to attend to at the shipping, and there was no excuse for her conduct. She was a woman with a happy home and three little children, and there was no justification for turning herself into an habitual drunkard. Although it was submitted that the husband's letters did not complain of the wife's intemperate habits, it was obvious that those which had been produced were mostly of ancient date. The result was, in my view of the case, that the husband (the respondent) had succeeded in establishing that he had "just cause" for withdrawing from cohabitation and refusing to return to his wife. With regard to the respondent's cross-claim for judicial separation, it did not stand on the same basis as his defence to the suit for restitution. I am not satisfied that a case of legal cruelty within the cases of Oldroyd v. Oldroyd and Russell v. Russell had been made out, although it might possibly be that the wife might have uttered certain threats. The petition for restitution of conjugal rights must therefore be dismissed, and the husband's cross-prayer for a judicial separation refused.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Dec. 7, 8; April 7.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ODELL. (a.)

Land transfer — Mortgage or charge — Registration — Registered proprietor — Fraud — Forged transfer — Rectification of register — Indemnity — Insurance fund — Request to register — Implied warranty of title — Loss by rectification — Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) — Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 7.

A transferee of a charge on registered land in Middlesex took his transfer to the Land Registry for registration, and was accordingly registered as proprietor of the charge. It was afterwards discovered that the transfer was forged by the solicitor of the original proprietor. The original proprietor obtained an order for rectification of the register. The transferee applied to the registrar for indemnity under section 7 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and the registrar made an award in his favour, which was confirmed by Kekewich, J.

Held, on appeal, that as the transferee had no transfer from some person previously on the register, and had not, therefore, in that sense relied on the register, he had suffered no loss by rectification, and was not entitled to any indemnity under section 7.

Per Stirling, L.J.—The registrar under the Land Transfer Acts has a statutory duty of a ministerial character to register transfers of registered charges on registered land, and on the demand of the transferee to issue to him a certificate of proprietorship. It is a breach of duty and a wrong to the existing registered proprietor to remove his name and register the charge in the name of the supposed transferee if the latter has, in fact, no title to require the registrar to do so. And an act of the registrar when called upon to exercise his duty on the request, direction, and demand of another, which is apparently legal, but is, in fact, illegal and a breach of duty, is contemplated by the Act of 1897 as giving rise to rights of indemnity against the Crown. On the principles laid down in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, 54 W. R. 49, there ought to be implied a contract by any person applying for registration to keep the Crown indemnified against any liability which may result from the exercise by the registrar of the supposed duty to register the instrument presented to him. Also a person who brings a transfer to a registering authority and requests him to register it, not only affirms it to be genuine but warrants it to be so.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (53 W. R. 541), reversed.

This was an appeal against the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 53 W. R. 541). The case raised an important question upon the construction of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 7, which gives a right of indemnity in certain cases of fraud or mistake in the registration of titles.

On the 7th of December, 1901, Mrs. Connell was registered as proprietor of a charge on some property at Notting Hill, which was on the register for £350, but was subsequently reduced to £300.

In February, 1903, Mrs. Connell's solicitor, Alexander Thompson, entered into negotiations with Mr. Odell for the transfer to him of this charge. Mr. Odell, after investigating the title, agreed to take a transfer.

On the 23rd of February Odell paid £300 to Thompson in pursuance of a written authority purporting to be signed by Mrs. Connell, and received in exchange an instrument of transfer, also purporting to be signed by Mrs. Connell, and the transfer was registered in due course. The authority and the transfer were not, in fact, signed by Mrs. Connell, but her name was forged by Thompson, who was subsequently convicted of the forgery. As soon as Mrs. Connell discovered the fraud she applied to the court for rectification of the register, and by an order made by Kekewich, J., on the 25th of June, 1904, the register was ordered to be rectified by removing Mr. Odell's name therefrom, and restoring that of Mrs. Connell as proprietor of the charge, and the register was rectified accordingly. In these circumstances, Mr. Odell applied to the registrar, under sub-section 5 of section 7 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, to determine whether he was entitled to an indemnity under that section. The registrar, being of opinion that Mr. Odell had suffered loss by the rectification, and that he was not aware of the fraud, and had, in fact, exercised reasonable care in the transaction, held that he was entitled to indemnity and awarded him the sum of £369 17s. 4d., to be paid out of the insurance fund established in that behalf by section 21 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

The Treasury and the trustees of the insurance fund appealed from this decision.

On behalf of the respondent, Mr. Odell, it was objected that the appellants had no locus standi, and that upon the true construction of sub-section 5 of section 7 the sole right of appeal was in the applicant for indemnity, but the court overruled this objection, and the case was then heard upon its merits.

The question depended primarily upon the construction of the first four sub-sections of section 7 of the Act of 1897, and especially upon the construction of sub-section 4, which provides that where the register is rectified under the principal Act by reason of fraud or mistake which has occurred in a registered disposition for valuable consideration, and which the grantee was not aware of and could not by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered, the person suffering loss by the rectification shall likewise be entitled to indemnity under this section.

Kekewich, J., held that the case fell within the statute.

The Treasury appealed.

The Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 7: "The first registration of any person as proprietor of freehold land (in this Act referred to as first registered proprietor) with an absolute title shall vest in the person so registered an estate in fee simple in such land, together with all rights, privileges, and appurtenances belonging or appurtenant thereto, subject as follows: (1) To the incumbrances, if any, entered on the register; and (2) unless, under the provisions of this Act, the contrary is expressed on the register, to such liabilities, rights, and interests, if any, as are by this Act declared not to be incumbrances; and (3) where such first proprietor is not entitled for his own benefit to the land registered as between himself and any persons claiming under him, to any unregistered estates, rights, interests, or equities to which such persons may be entitled, but free from all other estates and interests whatsoever, including estates and interests of her Majesty, her heirs and successors."

Section 8: "The registration of any person as first registered proprietor of freehold land with a possessory title only shall not affect or prejudice the enforcement of any estate, right, or interest adverse to or in derogation of the title of such first registered proprietor, and subsisting or capable of arising at the time of registration of such proprietor; but, save as aforesaid, shall have the same effect as registration of a person with an absolute title."

Section 22: "Every registered proprietor of any freehold or leasehold land may in the prescribed manner charge such land with the payment at an appointed time of any principal sum of money either with or without interest, and with or without a power of sale to be exercised at or after a time appointed. The charge shall be completed by the registrar entering on the register the person in whose favour the charge is made as the proprietor of such charge, and the particulars of the charge and of the power of sale, if any; the registrar shall also, if required, deliver to the proprietor of the charge a certificate of charge in the prescribed form."

Section 29: "Every registered proprietor of freehold land may, in the prescribed manner, transfer such land or any part thereof. The transfer shall be completed by the registrar entering on the register the transferee as proprietor of the land transferred, but until such entry is made the transferor shall be deemed to remain proprietor of the land. Upon completion of the registration of the transferee the registrar shall, if required, deliver to him a land certificate in the prescribed form; he shall also, in cases where part only of the land is transferred, if required, deliver to the transferor a land certificate containing a description of the land retained by him."

Section 30: "A transfer for valuable consideration of freehold land registered with an absolute title shall, when registered, confer on the transferee an estate in fee simple in the land transferred, together with all rights, privileges, and appurtenances belonging or appurtenant thereto, subject as follows: (1) To the incumbrances, if any, entered on the register; and (2) unless the contrary is expressed on the register, to such liabilities, rights, and interests, if any, as are by this Act declared not to be incumbrances, but free from all other estates and interests whatsoever, including estates and interests of her Majesty, her heirs and successors."

Section 40: "The registered proprietor of any charge may, in the prescribed manner, transfer such charge to another person as proprietor. The transfer shall be completed by the registrar entering on the register the transferee as proprietor of the charge transferred; the registrar shall also, if required, deliver to the transferee a fresh certificate of charge, but the transferor shall be deemed to remain proprietor of such charge until the name of the transferee is entered on the register in respect thereof."

[The Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), contains, in Schedule I., the following "minor amendment" to the above section 40: "A registered transferee for value of a charge, and his successors in title, shall not be affected by any irregularity or invalidity in the original charge itself, of which the transferee was not aware when it was transferred to him."]

Section 49: "The registered proprietor alone shall be entitled to transfer or charge registered land by a registered disposition; but, subject to the maintenance of the estate and right of such proprietor, any person, whether the registered proprietor or not of any registered land, having a sufficient estate or interest in such land, may create estates, rights, interests, and equities in the same manner as he might do if the land were not registered; and any person entitled to or interested in any unregistered estates, rights, interests, or equities in registered land may protect the same from being impaired by any act of the registered proprietor by entering on the register such notices, cautions, inhibitions, or other restrictions as are in this Act in that behalf mentioned. The registered proprietor alone shall be entitled to transfer a registered charge by a registered disposition; but, subject to the maintenance of the right of such proprietor, unregistered interests in a registered charge may be created in the same manner and with the same incidents, so far as the difference of the subject-matter admits, in and with which unregistered estates and interests may be created in registered land."

[The Land Transfer Act, 1897, contains in Schedule I. the following "minor amendment" to the above section 49: "This section includes power to sever the mines and minerals from the surface."]

Section 95: "Subject to any estates or rights acquired by registration in pursuance of this Act, where any court of competent jurisdiction has decided that any person is entitled to any estate, right, or interest in or to any registered land or charge, and as a consequence of such decision such court is of opinion that a rectification of the register is required, such court may make an order directing the register to be rectified in such manner as it thinks just."

Section 96: "Subject to any estates or rights acquired by registration in pursuance of this Act, if any person is aggrieved by any entry made or by the omission of any entry from the register under this Act, or if default is made, or unnecessary delay takes place in making any entry in the register, any person aggrieved by such entry, omission, default, or delay may apply to the court in the prescribed manner for an order that the register may be rectified, and the court may either refuse such application with or without costs, to be paid by the applicant, or it may, if satisfied of the justice of the case, make an order for the rectification of the register."

Section 97: "The registrar shall obey the order of any competent court in relation to any registered land on being served with such order or an official copy thereof."

Section 98: "Subject to the provisions in this Act contained with respect to registered dispositions for valuable consideration, any disposition of land or of a charge on land which if unregistered would be fraudulent and void, shall, notwithstanding registration, be fraudulent and void in like manner."

The Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 7: "(1) Where any error or omission is made in the register, or where any entry in the register is made or procured by or in pursuance of fraud or mistake, and the error, omission, or entry is not capable of rectification under the principal Act, any person suffering loss thereby shall be entitled to be indemnified in the manner in this Act provided. (2) Provided that where a registered disposition would if unregistered be absolutely void, or where the effect of such error, omission, or entry would be to deprive a person of land of which he is in possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits, the register shall be rectified and the person suffering loss by the rectification shall be entitled to the indemnity. (3) A person shall not be entitled to indemnity for any loss where he has caused or substantially contributed to the loss by his act, neglect, or default, and the omission to register a sufficient caution, notice, inhibition, or other restriction to protect a mortgage by deposit or other equitable interest, or any estate or interest created under section 49 of the principal Act, shall be deemed neglect within the meaning of this sub-section. (4) Where the register is rectified under the principal Act by reason of fraud or mistake which has occurred in a registered disposition for valuable consideration, and which the grantee was not aware of and could not by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered, the person suffering loss by the rectification shall likewise be entitled to indemnity under this section. (5) The registrar may, if the applicant desires it, and subject to an appeal to the court, determine whether a right to indemnity has arisen under this section, and, if so, award indemnity. In the event of an appeal to the court, the applicant shall not be required to pay any costs except his own, even if unsuccessful, unless the court shall consider that the appeal is unreasonable. (6) Where indemnity is paid for a loss, the registrar, on behalf of the Crown, shall be entitled to recover the amount paid from any person who has caused or substantially contributed to the loss by his act, neglect, or default."

Section 21: "(1) For the purpose of providing indemnity payable under this Act, there shall be established an insurance fund to be raised by setting apart at the end of each financial year such portion of the receipts from fees taken in the land registry as the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury shall by order determine. (2) The insurance fund shall be invested in such names and manner as the Treasury from time to time direct. (3) If the insurance fund is at any time insufficient to pay indemnity for any loss chargeable thereon, the deficiency shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, or the growing produce thereof; but any sum so paid out of the Consolidated Fund, or the growing produce thereof, shall be repaid out of the money subsequently standing to the credit of the insurance fund."

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and R. J. Parker, for the appellants, in addition to the arguments used by them in the court below, contended that the decision of the House of Lords in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, ante, at p. 49, [1905] A. C. 392, was applicable to the present case.

Cur. adv. vult.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—It has been urged in this case that the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, and in particular the opinion of Lord Davey in that case, are applicable in the present case. In other words, it is argued that in the case of an application to register a transfer under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875, 1897, by the registered proprietor of a charge to another person as proprietor there is implied by law a contract, by the person making the application to register, to keep indemnified the person having the duty to register against any liability which may result from the exercise of the duty to register, and that the person requesting, directing, or demanding registration will be liable to the obligations of such implied contract notwithstanding the fact that he was not aware of any invalidity in his title to make such request, and could not with reasonable diligence have discovered it. I do not think that it was argued that this implied covenant would arise in every case of a person applying for registration under the Land Transfer Acts; for instance, I do not think that it was argued that such an implied contract to indemnify would arise in the case of an application for registration of any person as proprietor of freehold land with an absolute title, which registration, by the terms of section 7 of the Act of 1875, vests in the person so registered an estate in fee simple in such land, and is the act of the registrar acting to some extent in a judicial capacity, hearing objections and determining them, subject to an appeal to the court. It seems to me, therefore, that before the court can come to the conclusion that the principle declared by the decision in the House of Lords in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay applies to a person applying to register and registering a transfer by the registered proprietor of a charge on land, the court must examine carefully what are the provisions of the Land Transfer Acts, 1875, 1897, generally, and in particular in regard to the transfer of such charges. In my opinion, however, it is not necessary to decide this question in the present case, and for this reason—that either the plaintiff is or he is not entitled to the statutory indemnity under the Land Transfer Act, 1897. If he is so entitled, this is wholly inconsistent with the application of the principle of Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay. If he is not so entitled, this appeal must succeed, whether or not the principle of Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay applies to applications to register under the Land Transfer Acts. No question is raised on this appeal as to any obligation on the applicant to indemnify the registrar.

I will proceed, therefore, to examine those Acts. It is to be remembered that the object of the Land Transfer Acts, as the preamble states, is to make provision for the simplification of the title to land, and for facilitating the transfer of land in England by means of registration. I will now examine what are the provisions of the Act of 1875. Part I. deals with the entry of land on register of title. Section 5 deals with the application for registration with an absolute title, or with a possessory title only; section 6 with the evidence of title required on application. Section 7 provides that the first registration of any person as proprietor of freehold land with an absolute title shall vest in the person so registered an estate in fee simple in such land. Section 8 provides that the registration of any person as first registered proprietor of freehold land with a possessory title only shall not affect or prejudice the enforcement of any estate, right, or interest adverse to or in derogation of the title of such first registered proprietor and subsisting or capable of arising at the time of the registration of such proprietor, but save as aforesaid shall have the same effect as registration of a person with an absolute title. It would appear, therefore, that, subject to the provisions for rectification, registration as proprietor of freehold land with an absolute title is not liable to be affected by the enforcement of any estate, right, or interest adverse to or in degrogation of such title. Section 10 provides for the delivery to the registered proprietor of a certificate called a land certificate, which certificate, I think, is rightly stated in the note on p. 151 of Brickdale and Sheldon's Land Transfer Act (2nd ed.) for almost all purposes to take the place of title-deeds. Then follow the sections dealing with registration of leasehold land, and in this case also the registration as first registered proprietor, with a declaration that the lessor had an absolute title to grant the lease under which the land is held, is to be deemed to vest in such person the possession of the land for all the leasehold estate therein described. Section 17 deals with the regulations as to the examination of title by the registrar in the case of freehold and leasehold land, and sub-section 1 provides for prescribed notices giving persons an opportunity to come in and object, and sub-section 2 provides that the registrar shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any such objections, subject to an appeal to the court. The registrar in this case would seem to be exercising a judicial function. Part II. deals with registered dealings with registered land, and provides for the creation of charges by every registered proprietor of freehold or leasehold land, and the delivery of a certificate of charge. And the remainder of the sections under this head deal with the covenants to be implied upon the registration of such mortgage or charge and other matters as to the entry on the land by the registered proprietor of a registered charge, his power of sale, priority, and discharge of registered charges. Section 29 deals with the transfer of freehold land by registered proprietors of such land and for delivery to the transferee of a land certificate. Section 30 provides that a transfer for valuable consideration of freehold land registered with an absolute title shall, when registered, confer upon the transferee an estate in fee simple in the land transferred free from all other estates or interests whatsoever, including estates and interests of her Majesty. Under the heading "Transfer of leasehold land" one finds, mutatis mutandis, similar provisions with regard to transfers of leasehold land in the case of transfer for valuable consideration of leasehold land with a declaration of absolute title of lessor. It seems to me difficult, in the case of the application by a person for registration resulting in his registration as first registered proprietor of freehold land or of leasehold land with a declaration of the absolute title of the lessor, to raise the implied covenant to indemnify the registrar such as that referred to in the decision of the House of Lords in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, in case the registered proprietor shall turn out not to have a good title. So far as the title of the first registered proprietor is concerned, the words as to the conferring on the transferee in the one case an estate in fee simple, and in the other case the words as to vesting in the transferee the possession, do not seem to be reconcileable with the raising of such implied covenant of indemnity. I will now deal with section 40, which deals with the transfer of charges. It provides that the registered proprietor of any charge may in the prescribed manner transfer such charge to another person as proprietor. The transfer shall be completed by the registrar entering on the register the transferee as proprietor of the charge transferred. The registrar shall also, if required, deliver to the transferee a fresh certificate of charge, but the transferor shall be deemed to remain proprietor of such charge until the name of the transferee is entered on the register in respect thereof. In Schedule I., s. 40, it is provided that a registered transferee for value shall not be affected by any irregularity or invalidity in the original charge itself of which the transferee was not aware when it was transferred to him. This schedule is the schedule of minor amendments which derives its legislative force from section 18 of the Act of 1897. I will now deal with the Act of 1897, and in particular with the indemnity section 7 and its relation to the facts of the present case. In construing section 7 it is to be remembered that the Act of 1875, ss. 95 and 96, which provided for rectification, made no provision for indemnity, whereas section 7 of the Act of 1897 not only makes provision for indemnity, but seems by sub-section 2 to extend the area of rectification. Section 7 of the Act of 1897 begins thus with sub-section 1: [His lordship read the sub-section, and continued:] This sub-section has no application to the present case, because the entry of the name of Mr. Odell is capable of rectification. Sub-section 2 of section 7 provides: [His lordship read the sub-section, and continued:] This sub-section seems to extend the area of rectification, for it provides for rectification in cases where the effect would be to destroy estates or rights acquired by registration under this Act. The sub-section appears only to apply to land, but this is not very clear. Sub-section 3 of section 7 excludes from indemnity a person who has contributed to any loss by his act, neglect, or default. In this case the facts found prevent this part of the sub-section from applying to Mr. Odell. The latter part of this sub-section deals with omissions to register. It runs thus: [His lordship read the sub-section, and continued:] It is under this sub-section, if at all, that Mr. Odell can claim indemnity for loss suffered by him from the rectification of the register by the erasure of his name as registered proprietor of this charge. These words are undoubtedly capable of a construction wide enough to support Mr. Odell's claim to indemnity on the ground that he has suffered loss by the rectification of the register necessitated by reason of the fraud and forgery of the name of the registered proprietor of the charge, but on its true construction I do not think that this sub-section entitles Mr. Odell to indemnity. It is true that the register has been rectified by reason of fraud which has occurred in a registered disposition for valuable consideration, but in my judgment the whole scheme of the Acts is to afford facilities and give security in the transfer of land and in the creation and transfer of incumbrances thereon to those who have acquired estates or rights by registration, or to those who have for valuable consideration become transferees from registered proprietors of land or charges. I cannot, having regard to the decision of this court and the observations of Cozens-Hardy, L.J., speak in relation to this Act of legal estates as passing by reason of registration, but merely of overriding rights; but, using the words "estates and rights" (which are the words used in the 95th section of the Act of 1875) in the sense of overriding rights, I think that Mr. Odell has no claim to indemnity under this clause. His name as registered proprietor of the charge has not been put on the register after any judicial investigation, such as that which takes place before the registration of a person as first registered proprietor of freehold land with absolute title or a qualified title (see sections 7, 8, 9 of the Act of 1875), or the registration of the first registered proprietor of leasehold land with a declaration of title of lessor to grant the lease: see section 13 of the Act of 1875, and rule 46 of the rules of 1898. The act of the registrar in putting the name of a transferee of a charge on the register is a mere ministerial act in the performance of a ministerial duty. It confers on the transferee no estate or right which he had not before registration. The utmost which it confers on him is the capacity to transfer to a purchaser for valuable consideration unaware of any irregularity in the transaction. But it may be said that Mr. Odell by the rectification of the register has lost this capacity to transfer, because until the rectification by the erasure of his name from the register he could have given a good title to a transferee of the charge for valuable consideration, and that by the erasure he has lost this, but I do not think that it is by the erasure that he has lost this capacity; he could not, in my judgment, have exercised this power given to him by the ministerial, not the judicial, act of the registrar after notice of the fact of the forgery, and I think that he could be restrained by injunction from so doing. There is one more suggestion with which I have to deal—that is, that the words of amendment 40 in the first schedule to the Land Transfer Act of 1897, which is an amendment of section 40 of the principal Act, properly construed, affect the title of registered transferees of a charge with any irregularity or invalidity in respect of title, unless such irregularity or invalidity is to be found in the original charge itself. But I do not agree in this construction. It is to be observed that in the case of charges the object of the Act is to protect those who take a charge in reliance on the Act and following the steps prescribed by the Act. Now it is plain that the original charge, if it is invalid by reason of forgery or otherwise, has not been made good by being placed on the register; there is no judicial act such as there is on the first registration of title to freehold or leasehold land, and the result is that the original charge on which the whole succession of transfers is based is itself invalid, and I am inclined to think that this accounts for and is the reason of the amendment in question in the first schedule of the Act of 1897. I think that Mr. Odell is not entitled to indemnity, and that this appeal must be allowed.

STIRLING, L.J., stated the facts, and continued: In support of this appeal two main grounds were urged—(1) that the application of Odell was precluded by the decision of the House of Lords on the 3rd of July, 1905 (a date subsequent to that of the decision of Kekewich, J.), in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay; and (2) that in the circumstances, and upon the true construction of the Acts, Odell was not entitled to the indemnity which he claimed. It was admitted that Odell was entirely innocent, and acted in perfect good faith in the transaction, and it was not alleged that he could by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered the invalidity of the transfer. The case cited, however, shows that if the transaction had related to stock or shares governed by the provisions of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, or similar provisions in a private Act of Parliament, Odell would, in the circumstances stated above, have been liable to indemnify the company or corporation, whose stock or shares were the subject-matter of the transaction, against liability arising from the company or corporation having acted on his request to register the forged instrument. If the principles on which that decision is based apply to the Land Registry, then Odell's claim must fail. The Land Registry is a branch of the public service, established and conducted under and in accordance with the provisions of the Land Transfer Acts of 1875 and 1897. The registrar is a servant of the Crown, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, receiving a salary paid by the Treasury out of money provided by Parliament (Act of 1875, s. 106). By section 108 of the same Act it is enacted that "subject to the provision of this Act, the registrar shall conduct the whole business of registering land under this Act." For the services rendered by the registry fees are charged, which by virtue of section 113 of that Act came under the control of the Treasury, and ultimately (subject to the deduction of certain expenses) find their way into the Consolidated Fund. This section has been repealed, and the fees are now dealt with under the Public Offices Fees Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 58), but they still constitute part of the public funds.

When land is for the time placed on the register, the registrar has important duties of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature to perform as regards the examination of the title; but, as regards transfers of registered charges on registered land, his duties are of a ministerial character. Neither the Acts, nor the rules made under them, impose on the registrar the duty of ascertaining that the instrument of transfer has been duly executed, except to the extent of sending to to the registered proprietor, at his registered address, notice of the fact that the instrument has been delivered at the registry for registration, and abstaining from completing the registration for three clear days from the posting of the notice. This precaution was taken in the present case, but, unfortunately, was ineffectual by reason of the registered proprietor's absence from home.

Section 40 of the Act of 1875 prescribes that a transfer by the registered proprietor shall be completed by the registrar entering on the register the transferee as proprietor of the charge; and also that the registrar shall, if required, deliver to the transferee a fresh certificate of charge. It is to be remarked that the Act contains no provision conferring on the transferee of a charge any estate or right or interest such as is found in section 30 with respect to transfers of land. The Act of 1875 provided for rectification of the register in certain cases (see sections 95-97), but did not in any way provide for indemnity to any person to whom loss was caused either by errors or omissions in the register or by rectification. This was altered by the Act of 1897, s. 7 of which confers a right to indemnity in the following cases: Sub-section 1, where any error or omission is made in the register, or where any entry in the register is made or procured by fraud or mistake, and the error, omission, or entry is not capable of rectification under the Act of 1875; sub-section 2, where a registered disposition would, if unregistered, be absolutely void, or where the effect of such error or omission or entry would be to deprive a person of land of which he is in possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits; and sub-section 4, where the register is rectified under the Act of 1875 by reason of fraud or mistake which has occurred on a registered disposition for valuable consideration and which the grantee was not aware of and could not by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered. The order for rectification in the present case may have been made under sections 95 and 96 of the Act of 1875, or under section 7, sub-section 2, of the Act of 1897; in either case the enactment is that the person suffering loss by the rectification should be entitled to indemnity. A limitation to this right is imposed by sub-section 3 of section 7, which provides that a person shall not be entitled to indemnity for any loss where he has caused or substantially contributed to the loss by his act, neglect, or default. Sub-section 6 provides that where indemnity is paid for a loss the registrar on behalf of the Crown shall be entitled to recover the amount paid from any person who has caused or substantially contributed to the loss by his act, neglect, or default. Section 21 of the Act of 1897 enacts that for the purpose of providing indemnity under the Act there shall be established an insurance fund to be raised by setting apart a certain portion of the receipts from fees taken in the Land Registry; that this insurance fund shall be invested in such names and manner as the Treasury from time to time direct, and that if the insurance fund is at any time insufficient to pay indemnity for any loss chargeable thereon the deficiency shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

Now, the principle of the decision in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay is thus stated by Lord Davey: "I think that the appellants have a statutory duty to register all valid transfers and on the demand of the transferee to issue to him a fresh certificate of title to the stock comprised therein. But of course it is a breach of their duty and a wrong to the existing holders of stock for the appellant to remove their names and register the stock in the name of the supposed transferee if the latter has in fact no title to require the appellants to do so. I am further of opinion that where a person invested with a statutory or common law duty of a ministerial character is called upon to exercise that duty upon the request, direction, or demand of another (it does not seem to me to matter which word you use) and without any default on his own part acts in a manner which is apparently legal, but is in fact illegal and a breach of the duty, and thereby incurs liability to these parties, there is implied by law a contract by the person making the request to keep indemnified the person having the duty against any liability which may result from the exercise of the supposed duty. And it makes no difference that the person making the request is not aware of the invalidity in his title to make the request or could not with reasonable diligence have discovered it." Much of this is directly applicable to the present case. The registrar has a statutory duty which (as I have already pointed out) is of a ministerial character, to register transfers of registered charges on registered land, and on the demand of the transferee to issue to him a certificate of proprietorship. It is a breach of duty and a wrong to the existing registered proprietor to remove his name and register the charge in the name of the supposed transferee if the latter has in fact no title to require the registrar to do so. It is said, however, that the registrar incurs no personal liability when he is called upon to exercise his duty on the request, direction, or demand of another, and without default on his own part acts in a manner which is apparently legal, but is in fact illegal and a breach of duty. I do not think it is necessary to decide that this proposition is well founded, but it seems to me very likely that it may prove to be so, for the reason that, the rights of registered proprietors being purely statutory, and remedies being in certain specific cases (of which the present is one) given by the same statute for the violation of those rights, it may well be that registered owners are not entitled to other remedies than those given, and are in particular excluded from any action against the registrar. I should, therefore, assume that the registrar is under no personal liability in the present case. Still, the legal position appears to be this: The registrar is a servant of the Crown "conducting"—in the language of section 108 of the Act of 1875—"the whole business of registering land under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897. The fees taken in the Land Registry form part of the public revenue, and are in the eye of the law Crown property. The acts of the registrar are contemplated by the Act of 1897 as being capable of giving rise to rights to indemnity which are to be satisfied out of a portion of the fees, and, if necessary, out of the Consolidated Fund—that is, out of Crown property. The acts of the registrar may therefore under the statute give rise to liability on the part of the Crown. It seems to me that in this state of things there may, and ought to be, implied a contract by a person applying to the registrar to register a transfer, to keep the Crown indemnified against any liability which might result from the exercise by the registrar, as the servant of the Crown, of the supposed duty to register the instrument presented to him. It may be a question whether such contract ought to be implied with the Crown directly, or with the registrar, the head of this department of Crown business, who is by the Act of 1897 expressly authorized to sue on behalf of the Crown where indemnity has been paid for a loss. It would seem that a good deal may be said for the latter view, but for the purpose of the present decision it is unnecessary to decide which is the more correct.

Even if no such contract can be implied, I still think that this claim to compensation ought not to succeed. It is laid down by Lord Davey in the same case of Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay that a person who brings a transfer to a registering authority, and requests him to register it, thereby makes a representation that it is a genuine document, and he further said that he was disposed to think (though it was not necessary so to decide) that such person not only affirmed it to be genuine, but warranted that it was so, and he expressly said that he considered this to be the result of the decision in Oliver v. Bank of England, 50 W. R. 340, [1902] 1 Ch. 610, affirmed in the House of Lords under the name of Starkey v. Bank of England, 51 W. R. 513, [1903] A. C. 114. Consequently, Odell, who brought the transfer to the registrar and requested him to register it, thereby affirmed and warranted that the transfer was genuine, which it was not. This act on his part (although innocent) directly brought about the registration of the charge in his name, and, in my opinion, caused or substantially contributed to the loss of which he now complains. Further, if he had, before the discovery of the forgery, transferred the charge to a purchaser for value without notice whose name was afterwards removed from the register and who received indemnity, I think that the registrar would have been entitled to recover the amount paid from him under section 7, sub-section 6, of the Act of 1897.

I think, therefore, that the principles laid down in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay apply, and on this ground, which was not before Kekewich, J., I think that his decision ought to be reversed and the claim of Odell disallowed. It is therefore unnecessary to say anything on the second of the two grounds which I have mentioned, but as this portion of the case has been fully discussed by my brethren I wish to add that I do not differ from their conclusion, though I have entertained a doubt, which is not wholly removed, whether Mr. Odell did not by the removal of his name from the register lose the benefits which are conferred on the registered proprietor for the time being of a charge by sections 23 to 27 of the Act of 1875, and thus become entitled to some compensation.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., after stating the facts and reading sub-section 4 of section 7 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, continued: Now, under the Land Transfer Act, 1875, a person who can prove (1) that he has a transfer from a registered proprietor, and (2) that he has been entered on the register as proprietor in respect of such transfer, has certain definite rights conferred upon him. If the transaction relates to land the case is governed by section 29 and following sections. If the transaction relates to a charge the case is governed by section 40, but no person other than the person first registered can claim any beneficial right or interest from the mere fact of being on the register unless he can also prove that he has a transfer from some person previously on the register, and in that sense has relied upon the register. Odell has no such transfer, and has not suffered any "loss by the rectification," and he is therefore not entitled to any indemnity under section 7. On this ground I think the appeal must succeed. If Odell had transferred his charge to X., who without notice of the forgery had been entered on the register, X. might have had a claim for indemnity, because X. would have fulfilled both the registered conditions. He would have relied, as he was entitled to rely, upon the fact that Odell was registered as proprietor. His position would be substantially different from that of Odell. I may observe that Odell took what purported to be an indorsed transfer of Mrs. Connell's original mortgage as well as a transfer of the land charge. In the result he takes no benefit under or by virtue of either of these forged documents.

In the course of the argument many points of great importance and of considerable difficulty were raised. In my view it is neither necessary nor desirable to express any opinion except upon the one point which is sufficient to dispose of this appeal.

Their lordships accordingly made an order allowing the appeal and discharging the order of the registrar. Counsel for the Attorney-General not objecting, the respondent's costs of the appeal, and also those directed to be paid by the order of Kekewich, J., and by the registrar's award, were ordered to be paid out of the insurance fund.

MAYOR, &c., OF NORWICH v. NORWICH ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS CO. (a.)

Tramway — Difference — Arbitration — Dispute under special Act—Paving of street—Jurisdiction of court—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 33—Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. cclv.), s. 57, sub-section 5.

By section 57 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, if the tramway company fail to maintain and keep in good condition, to the satisfaction of the corporation (sub-section 5), the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation, the corporation might, if they thought fit, themselves at any time, after seven days' notice to the company, do the work necessary for the repair and maintenance of the road, and the expense reasonably incurred by the corporation in so doing shall be repaid to them by the company.

The corporation repaired the road at the junction of the paving laid by the tramway company, and claimed to recover the expense thereof from the company under the above section. The company denied their liability to pay it, and the corporation brought an action to recover the amount.

Held, that the difference between the corporation and the company must be referred to arbitration under section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action; and that, as the jurisdiction of the court was ousted, the objection to the jurisdiction might be taken for the first time in the Court of Appeal.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Phillimore, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover £53 13s. 10d. for the expense of repairs to roadways, and for a declaration as to the rights of the respective parties under the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, s. 57, sub-section 5.

The defendants were the owners of tramways in the city of Norwich. The tramways were in some cases laid in granite setts, or in wood-paving edged with a line of granite setts, the roadway on either side being of macadam. The life of a granite sett is about twenty years under ordinary town traffic, but macadam will in the same circumstances not last more than four years. According to the evidence given at the trial the effect of this was to produce, as the macadam wore away a sort of descent or step from the granite setts on to the macadam. The line of granite setts thus tended to form a guiding ridge along which wheels of vehicles ran, gradually forming a trough which accumulated water, softening the macadam road. The plaintiffs, the corporation of Norwich, contended that under section 57, sub-section 5, of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, the defendants were liable to keep the road in a proper state of repair. The defendants contended that the word "junction" in the section meant the place where the two surfaces met, and that the plaintiffs could only require the tramway company to keep the two surfaces even at the same height at the junction if the plaintiffs maintained the surface of the macadam at the level at which it was originally laid.

By section 57 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897: "If the company fail to maintain and keep in good condition to the satisfaction of the corporation . . . (5) the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation, the corporation may, if they think fit, themselves at any time, after seven days' notice to the company, do the work necessary for the repair and maintenance of the road, and the expenses reasonably incurred by the corporation in so doing shall be repaid to them by the company with the addition of 5 per centum on such expense."

Phillimore, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, and he made the following declaration: "That the obligation of the company under section 57 (5) of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, to maintain and keep in good condition the junction therein mentioned extends to cases where by reason of the presence of tramways in a road the traffic in such road has caused the surface laid and maintained by the corporation to become worn down below the level of the paving laid and maintained by the company, and involves the maintenance by the company of a uniform and unbroken contour of such surface and paving, whether that is to be effected by the raising of the surface immediately adjoining such paving or the lowering of the paving itself."

The defendants appealed.

Upon the appeal the point was taken for the first time that the question in dispute must be referred to arbitration as required by section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted.

By section 22 of the Tramways Act, 1870, "Part II. and Part III. of this Act shall apply to every tramway, which is hereafter authorized by any provisional order or Act of Parliament, and shall be incorporated with such provisional order or Act, and all the said provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such provisional order or Act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, with the provisions of every other Act or part of any Act which shall be incorporated therewith, form part of the said provisional order or Act, and be construed therewith as forming one provisional order or Act, as the case may be."

By section 28, "The promoters shall, at their own expense, at all times maintain and keep in good condition and repair, with such materials and in such manner as the road authority shall direct, and to their satisfaction, so much of any road whereon any tramway belonging to them is laid as lies between the rails of the tramway and (where two tramways are laid by the same promoters in any road at a distance of not more than four feet from each other) the portion of the road between the tramways, and in every case so much of the road as extends eighteen inches beyond the rails of and on each side of any such tramway."

By section 33, "If any difference arises between the promoters or lessees on the one hand and any local authority or road authority, or any gas or water company, or any company, body, or person, to whom any sewer, drain, tube, wires, or apparatus for telegraphic or other purposes may belong, or any other company, on the other hand, with respect to any interference or control exercised, or claimed to be exercised, by them or him, or on their or his behalf, or by the promoters or lessees by virtue of this Act, in relation to any tramway or work, or in relation to any work or proceeding of the local authority, road authority, body, company, or person, or with respect to the propriety of or the mode of execution of any work relating to any tramway, or with respect to the amount of any compensation to be made by or to the promoters or lessees, or on the question whether any work is such as ought reasonably to satisfy the local authority, road authority, body, company, or person concerned, or with respect to any other subject or thing regulated by or comprised in this Act, the matter in difference shall (unless otherwise specially provided by this Act) be settled by an engineer or other fit person nominated as referee by the Board of Trade on the application of either party, and the expenses of the reference shall be borne and paid as the referee directs."

Danckwerts, K.C., and Henlé, for the defendants.—Parts II. and III. of the Tramways Act, 1870, are by section 22 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and by section 2 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, incorporated with and form part of the special Act. Therefore section 33 of that Act forms part of the special Act and the dispute, having arisen under section 57, sub-section 5, of the special Act, arose under "this Act" within section 33. The dispute must therefore be referred to arbitration as required by that section, and the court has no jurisdiction in the matter: Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co., 35 W. R. 299, 18 Q. B. D. 39; London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Donnellan, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, 46 W. R. Dig. 147; Crosfield v. Manchester Ship Canal Co., 54 W. R. 172, [1905] A. C. 421; Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society v. Kent, 32 W. R. 681, 9 App. Cas. 260; Bristol Trams and Carriage Co. v. Mayor, &c., of Bristol, 38 W. R. 693, 25 Q. B. D. 427. It is true that this point was not taken before Phillimore, J., but that does not give jurisdiction: Foster v. Usherwood, 26 W. R. 891, 3 Ex. D. 1; London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 37 W. R. 65, 40 Ch. D. 100; Burgess v. Morton, [1896] A. C. 136, 44 W. R. Dig. 130.

Macmorran, K.C., and E. E. Wild, for the plaintiffs—In every case the question of jurisdiction was raised either on the pleadings or in the court below. There is no case where it has been successfully raised in the Court of Appeal. In Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co. the objection was taken in the Divisional Court. In Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394, and Bristol Trams and Carriage Co. v. Mayor, &c., of Bristol, the point was also taken at once. The objection to the jurisdiction must be taken before judgment: London, Chatham, and Dover Rail- way Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co. In the case of prohibition, where the defect is not apparent on the face of the proceedings, but depends upon some fact in the knowledge of the applicant which he had an opportunity of bringing forward in the court below and did not do so and allowed the court to proceed to judgment, the court will decline to interpose: Mayor, &c., of London v. Cox, 16 W. R. 44, L. R. 2 H. L. 239, and Broad v. Perkins, 37 W. R. 44, 21 Q. B. D. 533. It is therefore too late to take the objection now. Section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, relates to differences between the promoters and the local authority as to their respective rights, and is only intended for the protection of the parties, and not of the public. Either of the parties can therefore waive their right to arbitration. Secondly, this is not a difference arising under "this Act" within section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870. "This Act" means the Tramways Act, 1870, whereas this dispute arose under section 57, sub-section 5, of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897. Further, the question in this case is as to the obligation of this tramway company to do certain work. That does not come within section 33. Moreover, section 57, sub-section 5, gives the corporation a statutory right of action to recover this expense. By section 56 a breach of the provisions of section 28 of the Act of 1870 is made subject to a penalty. That shows that it is not intended to take away the jurisdiction of the courts. The objection to the jurisdiction, therefore, is not a good one.

Danckwerts, K.C., in reply.—Even if the words "this Act" in section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, do not include the special Act incorporating it, still section 57, sub-sections 1, 2, and 3, are the same as the provisions of section 28 of the Act of 1870, and sub-section 6 is only intended to make clear what was not made clear under section 28. The case therefore comes within section 33.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The point which has been raised here was not raised before Phillimore, J. It is said that the result of section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, is that this particular matter in dispute between the tramways company and corporation of Norwich ought to be disposed of by an engineer nominated by the Board of Trade. The first answer put forward to that objection is that it was taken too late, and that it ought to have been taken at the trial. I can only say that I have always thought that it is well-established law that, where the objection is that the tribunal has no jurisdiction to try the case, that is an objection which, at all events in proceedings in the High Court, may be taken at any time. I go further and say that, if the court itself is satisfied that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is its duty to say so, if necessary itself taking the initiative. That is, in my opinion, well-established law. I asked upon what ground the proposition was based that the point could only be taken at the trial, as no authority was cited in support of it—the case of Mayor, &c., of London v. Cox not being in point—and it was said that the ground upon which that proposition was based was either waiver or something in the nature of estoppel. With regard to waiver, what is said to have been waived is the provision as to arbitration in section 33 of the Act of 1870, which is a public Act applying to all tramways and local authorities. The Act, however, is not in the nature of an agreement or Parliamentary bargain between parties. The provisions of section 33 are introduced for the benefit of the public, and no one can waive them. In Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co. Lord Esher said: "This restriction contained in the thirty-third section is not upon a particular local authority, it applies to them all; and when you consider what a number of local authorities there must be in the kingdom, with regard to these tramway roads at the present time, I should have expected that the Act of Parliament would put a bridle upon them to that extent, at all events." The dispute raised in that case was a dispute of the same character as that before us, and the argument is not open that there can be such a waiver as to give the court jurisdiction when the Act says that these particular matters must not be the subject of an action, but must be determined by an expert nominated by the Board of Trade. The same reasoning applies to the question of estoppel. But quite apart from that, it was not and could not be successfully argued that there was any estoppel at all.

It is said that some observations in London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co. show that, if objection to the jurisdiction is not taken at the proper time, it is too late to take it afterwards. But if that case is looked at it is clear, as appears from the judgment of Bowen, L.J., that the section under discussion in that case did not oust the jurisdiction of the court, but gave either party the option to apply for an order which, if he did apply for it, the court would be bound to make. The doctrine of applying too late, which applied in that case, has no application to a case where the jurisdiction of the court is ousted without any application to the court at all.

I have now dealt with all the preliminary points in the case. It being, therefore, competent for the parties to take the point here, I do not think that it was denied on behalf of the corporation that, if section 33 of the Act of 1870 applies, it ousts the jurisdiction of the court, because it appoints a special tribunal to settle the matter in dispute. It is said that the section does not apply. That contention is based upon certain grounds. One ground is this. It is said that, though there are certain provisions in the Tramways Act, 1870, which must be read, as far as Parts II. and III. are concerned, as part of the special Act, yet it is right in dealing with section 33 of the Act of 1870 to distinguish between the special Act and that which is made part of the special Act, and that contention is based upon the contrast which occurs now and then in the Act of 1870 between the expressions the "special Act" and "this Act," the words "this Act" occurring in section 33. In my opinion we must read the incorporated parts of the Act of 1870 as if they had been printed as part of the special Act, and, if that is done, the objection that section 33 only applies to disputes as specified in section 33 cannot be maintained. The particular way in which the objection is sought to be worked out is this. Reference was made to section 57 of the special Act, which sets out various duties which are imposed upon the company and the consequence of not performing those duties. It is said that though sub-sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 refer substantially to matters which are mentioned in section 28 of the Act of 1870, and which, therefore, fall within the operation of section 33, yet if a distinction is drawn between the general and the special Act, it will be found that sub-section 5 does not come within the area of those duties which are imposed upon tramway companies generally by section 28 of the Act of 1870. It is said that in these circumstances section 33 of the Act of 1870 has no application to disputes arising under sub-section 5. I have already said that, in so far as the argument is based upon a distinction between the special Act and those provisions of the general Act which are made part of the speciol Act, I do not think that there is any foundation for it. But I go further and say that sub-section 5 deals with duties which are part and parcel of those described in section 28 of the Act of 1870.

That only leaves me to deal with the operation of section 33. That section, by appointing a special tribunal to deal with disputes of this sort, has, in my opinion, ousted the jurisdiction of the court. The decision of the House of Lords in Crosfield & Sons v. Manchester Ship Canal Co. is really conclusive that this is a case in which the jurisdiction of the court is ousted.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that section 33 of the Act of 1870 ousts the jurisdiction of the court. That section in its terms closely resembles that in Crosfield & Sons v. Manchester Ship Canal Co. It is totally different from the section in London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., and I may add that this point is covered by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Reg. v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways Co. Therefore, both upon principle and upon authority I think that the jurisdiction of the court is ousted. It is true that the objection to the jurisdiction comes at a very late stage in the proceedings, and it is said that as it was not taken in the pleadings or at the trial we ought to disregard it. The objection, however, is to the jurisdiction of the court, and I cannot see how the parties can by not taking it before give the court jurisdiction. I agree upon that with my lord. The only remaining question is whether this is a matter which comes within section 33. One contention is that by section 22 of the Act of 1870 Parts II. and III. of that Act are incorporated with and form part of the special Act, the special Act and the incorporated are made one Act in the sense that the reference in section 33 to "this Act" refers to the provisions of the special Act. I do not think it necessary to decide that, but I do not desire to say that that contention is not well founded. It is sufficient to say that the dispute in the present case falls within two of the matters expressly mentioned in section 33 of the Act of 1870—first, the propriety of or the mode of execution of any work relating to any tramway; and second, whether the work is such as ought reasonably to satisfy the local authority. The question therefore is not one to be decided by the courts. It is then said that section 57, sub-section 5, of the special Act is inconsistent with this view. I do not think so. If the dispute is as to the obligation cast upon the company or as to the expense reasonably incurred by the corporation, it must be decided as required by section 33. Upon these grounds I think that the appeal must be allowed.

MOULTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I desire to add a few words with reference to the construction of section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870. Though it is not necessary to decide it, in my opinion the words of section 22 of the Act of 1870 (the incorporating section) do not entitle us to give to the words "this Act" in section 33 a meaning so as to include a reference to the special Act. Those words, in my opinion, refer to the general Act itself. But it is not necessary to decide it, because I think that section 57, sub-section 5, is only a particular instance, embodied in the special Act, of an agreement contemplated in section 29 of the Act of 1870, which the local authority and the tramway company are empowered, or indeed expected, to make. That being so, the general words of section 33 are ample to cover the dispute, and as the words of reference to arbitration are peremptory the court has no option but to give effect to the objection whenever taken, and, if necessary, itself to take the objection.

FOSTER v. WARBLINGTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Fishery—Pollution—Oyster beds on foreshore—Occupation—Discharge of sewage into the sea—Damage to oyster beds through acts of sanitary authority—Right of occupier to sue sanitary authority for damages.

In an action to recover damages from an urban district council for discharging sewage into the sea so as to pollute the plaintiff's oyster storage beds, it appeared that the foreshore on which the beds were situate was part of the waste of a manor, and that the plaintiff and his predecessors had occupied and used the beds for fattening oysters for a period extending as far back as living memory went; that, when the plaintiff first acquired the beds, a sewer which had been made by a rural sanitary authority, the predecessors of the defendants, discharged an inconsiderable quantity of sewage into the sea close to the beds; that subsequently the defendants made new sewers and connected them with the old sewer, and thus greatly increased the quantity of sewage discharged from that sewer; and that the plaintiff's beds were thereby contaminated and the oysters therein rendered unsafe for human food.

Held, that the action was maintainable.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Walton, J., at the trial of an action without a jury.

The plaintiff, James Duncan Foster, who carried on the business of an oyster merchant at Emsworth, near Chichester, claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from placing or maintaining their sewer outfalls in the neighbourhood of his oyster storage beds on the foreshore of Emsworth Creek, and from delivering sewage on the said foreshore and into the water in the neighbourhood of his said beds, so as to contaminate the same and to cause the oysters therein to become infected and unsafe for human food, and to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff. The plaintiff further claimed damages for loss and injury to his business caused by the contamination of his storage beds and oysters.

The defendants, who were the urban council of the district in which Emsworth was situate, by their defence said that the plaintiff had no title to the oyster storage beds in question, and no greater right in the foreshore, channel, or storage beds, and no greater right to or property in the oysters stored in the beds than any other member of the public, and that the user of the beds by the plaintiff was subject to the right of the defendants to discharge sewage into the sea; and that the plaintiff was not in a position to maintain an action in respect of the discharge of sewage into tidal navigable waters.

The defendants further said that they had by more than twenty years' user acquired an indefeasible right to discharge sewage into Emsworth Creek.

The defendants further said that by virtue of sections 21 and 24 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the owners and occupiers of premises within the defendants' district had the right to cause their drains to empty into the defendants' sewers, and that the defendants had no power to prevent the acts complained of.

The defendants further said that the plaintiff's remedy (if any) was under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

It appeared that in the year 1878 the plaintiff purchased thirteen oyster beds on the foreshore of Emsworth Creek from one James Cribb, together with the business of an oyster merchant then carried on by James Cribb. These beds had existed as far back as living memory went. The plaintiff subsequently purchased other similar beds from other persons. The plaintiff owned a number of vessels which he used for the purpose of dredging oysters from the sea, and those oysters he laid down in the beds to fatten for the market. He also procured oysters from abroad which he laid down in the beds together with those which he dredged from the sea. The beds, which were artificially constructed, some being boarded at the sides, and some having sides made of concrete, were advantageously situated, occupying such a high position that the oysters could be gathered almost at any time, irrespective of the state of the tides.

Documentary evidence was produced to show that the foreshore where the beds were situate had been part of the waste of the manor of Emsworth, and that the lord of the manor had owned a several fishery thereon.

The plaintiff had a very large trade in oysters, and during the last few years had sold on the market on the average over 2,000,000 oysters per annum.

In the year 1874 the guardians of the Havant Union, the rural sanitary authority of the district which then included Emsworth, had sought the advice of Mr. Ford, an engineer, with respect to the drainage of Emsworth. Mr. Ford found that there was no system of drainage at Emsworth, and devised a scheme, the effect of which was that a sewer discharged its sewage just above the oyster beds in question. The sewage was collected in a tank, which only discharged at low tide, being kept shut by means of a penstock for nineteen out of the twenty-four hours. The quantity of sewage discharged from this sewer was at first inconsiderable, and continued to be so during the time that the rural sanitary authority had jurisdiction in the district.

In 1894 the defendants were incorporated, their district being carved out of the Havant Union.

In 1895 and subsequent years the defendants extended the system of drainage by making new sewers whereby the discharge from the old outfall greatly increased. The plaintiff complained that this increased discharge of sewage constituted a nuisance, and alleged that the nuisance was further aggravated by the neglect of the defendants to make use of the penstock provided by Mr. Ford.

In 1896 a Dr. Bulstrode visited Emsworth and made a report on the sanitary condition of the place, in which he pointed out the danger which existed in regard to the plaintiff's oyster beds. In the same year the plaintiff made complaints as to the drainage system to the Board of Trade and the Local Government Board.

In the following year the plaintiff became a member of the defendant council and endeavoured to persuade the council to take steps to obviate the danger which threatened his oyster beds.

In November, 1902, the plaintiff supplied oysters for a banquet which was held at Winchester. After the banquet certain persons who were present were taken ill and died from typhoid fever.

An inquiry was held by the Local Government Board, and the conclusion arrived at was that the deaths were attributable to the consumption of oysters from Emsworth which were not free from sewage matter.

The plaintiff alleged that in consequence of the pollution caused by the defendants his trade was ruined, and he was unable to make use of his oyster beds.

Walton, J., was of opinion that the plaintiff had a good title to the soil of the oyster beds by virtue of the Statute of Limitations or otherwise, and that he had also acquired the right of several fishery, and that the oyster beds were his private oyster beds; and that the defendants could have no prescriptive right to discharge sewage into the sea so as to contaminate oysters in private oyster beds. He was also of opinion that, even supposing this were a public fishery, the defendants could not acquire by prescription a right to pollute a public fishery, and that the plaintiff was still entitled, as owner of the soil, to recover in respect of the injury done to him in the exercise by him of the public right of fishery. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff for damages to be assessed.

Sir Robert Finlay, K.C., and Hohler, for the defendants.

Macmorran, K.C., W. Wills, and J. G. Pease, for the plaintiff.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Walton, J., in favour of the plaintiff for damages to be ascertained. The plaintiff is an oyster merchant, and he brings this action to recover damages in respect of injury sustained by him in connection with his oyster beds at Emsworth, and with his business as an oyster merchant. The cause of damage alleged by him is that the defendants, who are the sanitary authority at Emsworth, have discharged near or on his oyster beds sewage to such an extent as to render his oysters unfit for human consumption. There is no dispute that unfortunately the oysters did become contaminated, some of them having been eaten at a banquet at Winchester with lamentable results.

The points raised on the appeal may shortly be stated in this way. In the first place it is said that the plantiff had no such property or interest in the oyster beds where he deposited his oysters as to give him any right of action against the defendants. Next, it is said that, even assuming the plaintiff had such a right or interest by way either of occupation or property in the oyster beds as might give him a right of action, yet, if regard is had to the history of the establishment and constitution of the defendant board, the defendant board are in the circumstances under no liability in respect of the oysters having been contaminated by the sewage. Further, a defence was raised which was based either on an alleged common law right to discharge sewage into the sea or on a prescriptive right alleged to be vested in the defendant board to discharge sewage into the sea at Emsworth. I will deal with these points one by one, and I propose to follow the judgment and the findings in fact and in law of Walton, J., and to express my views as to how far they can be justified. The first thing that Walton, J., finds is that the soil of the foreshore where the oysters were belonged to the lord of the manor. I think that that finding in fact is right. Walton, J., having found in fact that the soil of this foreshore belonged to the lord of the manor, being in fact part of the waste of the manor, this, of course, is not in itself sufficient to support any right in the plaintiff, because, to begin with, as Walton, J., points out, assuming the soil to be the soil of the lord of the manor, that does not give any property to the plaintiff unless he can show that either by grant or by the Statute of Limitations or in some other way a right has been established in him to the soil of the oyster beds. And then the question arises as to what rights of fishery there are. Walton, J., properly points out that, if there is not a right of several fishery in the lord of the manor, the rights of the public to fish will have to be taken into consideration. But I agree again with Walton, J., that this would not prevent the plaintiff from acquiring a part of the fishery by possession under the Statute of Limitations provided the soil of the foreshore were vested in the lord of the manor. Walton, J., goes on to describe the character of the oyster beds, and as to this part of the case there is no dispute. The manner in which the plaintiff used the oyster beds was this. He either dredged oysters in deep water at some distance from Emsworth and brought them in and deposited them in the beds, or else he imported oysters from abroad and deposited them in the beds. He deposited them there for the purpose of being fattened. We have to consider whether, the oysters being in these beds under these circumstances and being injured in this way, the plaintiff has a good cause of action. It is necessary for him to prove at least an occupation of the beds. Walton, J., went through a great deal of documentary evidence of various sorts, and arrived at the conclusion that the lord of the manor not only had the soil of the foreshore vested in him, but also had a several fishery on the foreshore within the ambit of the manor. The importance of the existence of a several fishery in this case is that the court is thereby relieved from a difficulty which might arise from the existence of a public right of fishing. If it were necessary to prove a title to the beds, in my opinion the plaintiff would in the circumstances be able to prove a good title. But in any case I think that the plaintiff has been in such occupation of the beds and for such a length of time as would entitle him to sustain an action for the injury which is alleged to have been done.

The next question is as to the liability of the defendant board. The defendant board were established in 1894 for a district carved out of the larger district of their predecessors, the sanitary authority of the Havant Union. When the defendant board were established a confirmation order was made, by article 9 of which it was provided that on and after the day of the first meeting of the board all the duties, liabilities, obligations, and property attached to or vested in the sanitary authority of the Havant Union should, so far as concerned the newly-formed district, attach to and vest in the new board. With regard to the history of the sewers, the town of Emsworth is not one in which the population has largely increased. There was a time when, so far as houses were concerned, the sewage was largely disposed of by means of privies and cesspits, and the use of water-closets was very little adopted. But so far as the sewage was carried away in drains it was discharged into a tidal millpond which has been spoken of as the seaside millpond. During the time of the defendants' predecessors the seaside millpond began to be somewhat offensive in consequence of the discharge of sewage into it, and the Havant Union were minded to cure this if they could. They consulted Mr. Ford, an eminent engineer and expert in these matters, and on his recommendation they laid down a new sewer discharging at another point, the object being to prevent the water of the seaside millpond being polluted. This plan involved the use of a penstock, by which it was expected that the sewage would be held back for nineteen hours out of the twenty-four, and that it would be let loose at such a time before low water as would enable it to be carried out far into the sea and rendered innocuous. But for some reason or other the penstock was not successful, and on its use being discontinued the nuisance largely increased. I agree with Walton, J., in his finding that the amount of sewage which found its way into Ford's sewer, which was made in 1874, was at first inconsiderable, but that the defendants, after they were constituted, themselves altogether altered the working and operation of that sewer. They made new sewers and connected them with Ford's sewer, and so largely increased the amount of sewage introduced into that sewer. One of the new sewers, which has been spoken of as the "pick-up sewer," was in a sense a benefit to the oyster beds, because it picked up the sewage of two or three old sewers which had hitherto discharged directly into the midst of the oyster beds and carried it into Ford's sewer. But although the defendants did to that extent ameliorate the condition of the oyster beds by preventing sewage being discharged directly on to them, it must not be forgotten that the pick-up sewer was by no means the only sewer made by the defendants which carried additional sewage into Ford's sewer. In these circumstances I think there is ample evidence that the defendants brought about the result complained of by the plaintiff, and they did so by their own acts of commission as distinguished from acts of omission. I am therefore relieved from the necessity of considering whether they could be held liable for mere acts of omission to perform their duty, and also from the necessity of considering whether article 9 of the confirmation order would have the effect of making them liable for the inefficient works of their predecessors.

If we come to the conclusion that the defendants are primâ facie responsible for the damage done by their sewers through their own acts to the plaintiff's oyster beds, the question arises whether there is any ground on which the defendants can escape liability. They attempt to escape by saying that they have a prescriptive right to discharge sewage into the sea. I cannot agree to that. This is not a mere case of inhabitants using sewers to a larger extent than formerly. During the last ten years the user of these sewers has been altogether different in character as well as in quantity. The defendants cannot rely in this case on any prescriptive right arising under the Prescription Act. If they are to succeed on prescription at all it must be by common law prescription, based either on an assumed grant or on immemorial user. In my opinion the claim to prescription fails altogether. With regard to the alleged common law right to discharge sewage into the sea, I am of opinion that there is no such right, and this is a view which has been expressed by Buckley, J., in Hobart v. Southend Corporation, 75 L. J. K. B. 305.

On these grounds I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of Walton, J., is right, but I will add a few words as to the cases which are supposed to militate against this view. [His lordship referred to Truro Corporation v. Rowe, 51 W. R. 68, [1902] 2 K. B. 709, and Reg. v. Downing, 11 Cox. 580, neither of which, in his opinion, conflicted with the judgment of Walton, J., and to Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board, 28 W. R. 111, 12 Ch. D. 102, and Attorney-General v. Dorking Union, 30 W. R. 579, 20 Ch. D. 595, each of which was in substance an action brought to compel the defendants to perform their statutory duties, and neither of which showed that the present action for damages would not lie.] The result is that I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

Lunacy—Vesting order—Criminal lunatic—Jurisdiction—Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), s. 5—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), ss. 136, 340, 342.

Under section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1850, the court had power to make a vesting order when any person was entitled jointly with any lunatic or person of unsound mind, words which included a criminal lunatic. The Act of 1850 was repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 342: "The Acts mentioned in the fifth schedule are hereby repealed to the extent set forth in the third column of the same schedule. Provided that this repeal shall not affect any jurisdiction or practice established, confirmed, or transferred, or salary or compensation or superannuation secured by or under any enactment repealed by this Act."

Sections 136 and 341 of the Act of 1890 in substance re-enact section 5 of the Act of 1850 as regards any trustee who is a lunatic or person of unsound mind, but section 340, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1890 enacts that, "save as in this Act otherwise expressly provided, this Act shall not extend to criminal lunatics."

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make a vesting order in the case of a criminal lunatic, inasmuch as the jurisdiction exercised under section 5 of the Act of 1850 was preserved by the saving clause, section 342 of the Act of 1890.

Under a marriage settlement a sum of India 3½ per cent. India Stock stood in the names of two trustees.

One of the trustees, R., committed a criminal offence, but being of unsound mind not so found he was sent to a criminal lunatic asylum.

A new trustee having been appointed in his stead, this was a summons taken out by the old trustee for an order vesting the said stocks in the joint names of himself and the new trustee.

The summons came before Cozens-Hardy, L.J., in chambers, as a judge in lunacy, who, doubting if he had authority to make the order, adjourned the summons into court for argument.

The new trustee was not represented.

The argument is fully referred to in the judgments of the court.

W. M. Cann for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—The question in this case arises upon the application by one of two trustees, who is himself sane, to have the funds which are at present vested in him and his co-trustee, who is a criminal lunatic, transferred to himself and a new trustee; and the question is whether, under the present condition of the law, there is jurisdiction to make that order. Before the passing of the Lunacy Act, 1890, a matter of this kind was provided for by section 5 of the Act of 1850, which deals with the question of the transfer of stock from one trustee to another in cases of lunacy without expressly making any distinction between a criminal lunatic and any other class of lunatic. Therefore such a matter as the present could formerly have been dealt with under that section. But the difficulty here arises by reason of the repeal of that section by the Act of 1890. Now, the repealing section (section 342) commences thus: "The Acts mentioned in the fifth schedule are hereby repealed to the extent set forth in the third column of the same schedule." Then in Schedule 5 of the Act among the sections repealed is section 5 of the Act of 1850. So that, thus far, we find that the statutory provision which previously covered criminal lunatics is repealed. Then comes the clause which gives rise to the present difficulty—namely, the proviso in section 342, and the question is whether that proviso preserves the jurisdiction over criminal lunatics conferred by section 5 of the Act of 1850. The proviso is in these words: Provided that this repeal shall not affect any jurisdiction or practice established, confirmed, or transferred, or salary or compensation or superannuation secured by or under any enactment repealed by this Act." Now there has been no reported decision upon these particular clauses of this Act, and therefore Mr. Cann has assisted us by reference to cases having some analogy to the present. In the absence of any authorities having a direct bearing upon this Act, he has suggested that in other instances in which Acts of Parliament have been repealed, such as Lord Cairns' Act, the old jurisdiction has been preserved by a saving clause in the repealing Act. Now, no doubt there are existing decisions which have treated the jurisdiction under Lord Cairns' Act as remaining in force, notwithstanding its repeal, for by some accident the repealing Act contains a saving clause; and in Sayers v. Collyer, 33 W. R. 91, 28 Ch. D. 103, Baggallay, L.J., made the following observations with reference to Lord Cairns' Act and the saving clause in the repealing Act: "Our attention was called to the fact that Lord Cairns' Act had been repealed since the former hearing of this case, being included in the schedules to the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 49), but that Act contains words preserving the jurisdiction of the court, notwithstanding the repeal. By section 5 it is enacted that any jurisdiction, or principle or rule of law or equity, established or confirmed, or right or privilege acquired, by or under any enactment repealed by the Act shall not be affected by the repeal. It is not, however, necessary to have recourse to Lord Cairns' Act, for it is clear that the court now has power to give damages as alternative relief. Before Lord Cairns' Act was passed a plaintiff who wished to enforce a restrictive covenant had two remedies—he might come into a court of equity for an injunction to restrain an infringement of his right, or he might have recourse to a court of common law to obtain damages, and Lord Cairns' Act gives the court of equity the power of giving a plaintiff damages by way of alternative relief. But since the Judicature Acts each division of the court has full power, apart from Lord Cairns' Act, to give either an injunction or damages." Whether that is a correct view or not of the law, for the reasons given by the Lord Justice, it cannot be regarded as an actual decision in point; but nevertheless it is an expression of opinion by a very learned judge that a particular saving clause, which does not appear to differ in any material respect from the saving clause in section 342 of the Act now before us, has the effect of keeping alive the jurisdiction under Lord Cairns' Act. A number of other cases to which Mr. Cann has referred certainly assume that the jurisdiction under Lord Cairns' Act has been preserved.

There were one or two other cases cited which have an important application to the present case—that is to say, cases where you find in an Act a repealing clause followed by a saving clause. There you have to see how far the two enactments can co-exist. It seems to me that the principle laid down in these cases is applicable to the present case. And that principle is this: where you have a repeal and you have also a saving clause, you have to consider whether the substituted enactment contains anything incompatible with the previously existing enactment. The question is, aye or no, is there incompatibility between the two? And in these cases the judges, in holding that there was a saving clause large enough to annul the repeal, said that you must see whether the true effect was to substitute something incompatible with the enactment in the Act repealed, and that, if you found something in the repealing Act incompatible with the general enactments in the repealed Act, then you must treat the jurisdiction under the repealed Act as pro tanto wiped out. That is settled by the cases of In re Bousfield, 32 Ch. D. 123, and Hume v. Somerton, 25 Q. B. D. 239. In both those cases the judges relied upon the incompatibility of the substituted enactments with the old enactments, and held that in consequence of that incompatibility the jurisdiction under the old Act could not remain; but they were prepared to hold that the saving clause would, if there were no incompatibility between the enactments, have the effect of annulling the repeal.

In this state of the authorities it appears to me that there is enough here to enable us to hold that under this saving clause the useful jurisdiction under the Act of 1850 in the case of criminal lunatics has not been absolutely wiped out. It would be a public misfortune if there were no jurisdiction over funds held by criminal lunatics, and in my opinion we are not bound to hold that in consequence of the Act of 1890 no such jurisdiction now exists. On the contrary it seems to me to have been the intention of this saving clause to preserve that jurisdiction. Accordingly I am of opinion that the jurisdiction under the old Act remains, though the practice must be governed by the new Act.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. No doubt there is a difficulty with regard to criminal lunatics owing to the repeal by section 342 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, of section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1850. The position is this: Prior to the Act of 1890 there was undoubted jurisdiction on the part of the Lords Justices, in a case like the present, to make a vesting order even in the case of a criminal lunatic. Turning to the Act of 1890, it appears that the section which deals with the general jurisdiction of the court to make vesting orders (section 136) does not cover the case of a criminal lunatic owing to section 340, which enacts that "save as in this Act otherwise expressly provided this Act shall not extend to criminal lunatics." Now the old jurisdiction conferred by the prior Act was first of all swept away by the repealing section (section 342) of the Act of 1890, but this repealing section contains a specific provision that the repeal "shall not affect any jurisdiction or practice established, confirmed, or transferred . . . by or under any enactment repealed by this Act." I agree that these general words at the end of the section must have some little limitation; and I think the limitation is this, that you cannot set up by this provision anything that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act of 1890. But, subject to that, I think that the plain words of section 342 must be given effect to. Therefore I look at the Act of 1890 to see whether it contains anything which shows that the jurisdiction of the court with respect to criminal lunatics is no longer to be exercised. Now I do not find that. There is power, no doubt, given by the Act of 1890 to make vesting orders of a general character; but the mere fact that section 340 says that the Act shall not extend to criminal lunatics does not, of itself, sufficiently show that it was the intention of the Legislature that this court should never exercise the jurisdiction it previously had as regards criminal lunatics. Let us test it in this way: Supposing there had been no repeal by section 342, does what is contained in the Act of 1890 amount to a repeal of the power of the court under the old Act? In my opinion certainly not. That being so, it appears to me that the old jurisdiction, so far as it concerns criminal lunatics, still exists. In my opinion the present case is exactly the kind of case the Legislature was aiming at which it put in the proviso in section 342. In my judgment, therefore, the order asked for can be made and should be made.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I am very glad that the Master of the Rolls and Romer, L.J., can see their way to a decision which is highly convenient. I in nowise dissent from that decision, although this is, in my opinion, an extremely difficult case. I am pressed rather with the view that this decision will tend rather to make the work of statute law revision a matter of great difficulty, because it will be so difficult to say whether the time has arrived at which the powers contained in the repealed Acts put into the schedule of any particular revision Act have come to an end, for it may be that in some case like the present a state of circumstances may arise in which it may be doubtful whether the jurisdiction under one or other of the repealed Acts is still existing. But here the language of the saving clause in section 342 is undoubtedly very strong. It contains words that enable us to make such an order as is asked for, and to hold that, so far as criminal lunatics are concerned, that there being no provision in the Act of 1890 to meet such a case as the present, we have to go back to the Act of 1850. There appears to be no direct decision on the point, and probably this is the first case of the kind which has happened. The actual form of the order requires consideration, and I shall be happy to assist Mr. Cann in putting the order into the proper form. It appears to me that the order should be entitled "In the matter of R., a criminal lunatic and a person of unsound mind," &c., and also "In the matter of the Trustee Act, 1850," as well as "In the matter of the Lunacy Acts, 1890 and 1891."

I wish to say one word as to Lord Cairns' Act. As I follow Mr. Cann's able argument, to which, personally, I feel indebted, there is no express decision that the Act is still in force, though in some cases it seems to have been so treated. But I think the better view is expressed by Lord Esher in Chapman, Morson, & Co. v. Auckland Union, 23 Q. B. D. 294, 38 W. R. Dig. 141, where he says: "It is true that Lord Cairns' Act has been repealed since the passing of the Judicature Acts by 46 & 47 Vict c. 49, s. 3, but I am confident that the repeal was not with the intention of taking away any of the powers given by the Act in a Chancery action, but because it was considered that the Judicature Acts re-enacted those powers, and therefore that Lord Cairns' Act had become obsolete and might be repealed." That passage, however, is not really necessary for the decision of this case.

Upon the whole, I think the order in the present case may go. The summons should be amended so as to agree with the form of order I have indicated, and leave is given accordingly.

Will — Codicil — Construction — Devise to father and children—Revocation—Extent of revocation—Acceleration of children's interests.

A testator devised freeholds upon trust (after events which had happened) as to one-fourth part for his son G. W. for life, and after his death (subject to a power of appointment to his widow, which was not exercised) for the children of G. W. equally; and as to the other three fourth parts upon trust for the other three sons of the testator respectively for life, and for their children, in manner corresponding with the trusts of the share of G. W. and his children. By a codicil reciting that he was dissatisfied with G. W. the testator revoked the gift "to or for the benefit of" G. W., and directed that every clause of his will purporting to entitle G. W. to any part of his estate should be construed, and the trusts thereof carried out, as if the name of G. W. had not appeared therein.

Held, that the words "for the benefit of" could be satisfied by other benefits given to G. W. by the will; that to revoke a gift by will the words of revocation must be plain; that the interests given by the will to the children of G. W. were not revoked; and that these interests were accelerated by the revocation of the interest of G. W.

The question in this summons was whether a revocation in a codicil of a gift of a share of real property to a son for life, and then to his children, extended to the interests of the children as well as to those of the son.

George Whitehorne, by his will made in March, 1894, consisting of numbered paragraphs, gave his business to his trustees upon trust to carry it on for the benefit of his four sons until the youngest attained twenty-one years, with liberty to employ any son as manager or otherwise, and provided for the other sons purchasing the share of any son in the business who, upon the determination of the previous trust, should be dead or unwilling to join in carrying on the business. And (in paragraph 6) the testator devised to his trustees a freehold house and premises in Wandsworth-road and also a freehold house on the same road upon certain trusts as to occupation of part thereof which came to an end on his youngest son attaining twenty years, and also upon trusts for his widow for life, and for his daughters for their respective lives until they married. And after the death of his wife and the determination of the trust in favour of his daughters, "Upon trust as to one equal fourth part thereof for my son George William during his life, with power to my said son by deed or will to appoint the income of such share or any part thereof to his widow for her life or for any shorter period, and from and after his death, and subject to and in default of any appointment in favour of his widow, upon trust for his children or child in fee simple, in equal shares between them if more than one. Provided always that if any child of my said son George William, being male, shall die before attaining the age of twenty-one years, or being female shall die before attaining that age or marrying, then and in every such case the share of the deceased child, including any accrued share under this present clause, shall go and belong to the others or other of the children of my said son in equal shares between them, if more than one. And upon trust as to the other three several equal fourth parts or shares of the said premises for my other three sons, Alfred, Frederick, and Edward James, respectively for life, and for their respective children or child, and with the like power of appointment in favour of any widow in manner corresponding in all respects with the trusts hereinbefore declared with reference to the share of my son George William and his children or child."

By clause 7 the testator bequeathed to his trustees the residue of his property upon trust for his three daughters equally.

The testator made a codicil to his will dated the 31st of July, 1894, paragraph 1 of which was as follows: "Whereas I have reasons for dissatisfaction with my son George William Whitehorne, and I have ceased to employ him in my business, and he has by my desire ceased to occupy my house No. 133, Wandsworth-road. Now, therefore, I revoke the trust contained in the sixth paragraph of my said will for permitting my said son to occupy the said house so long as he shall desire; and I hereby also revoke each and every devise, bequest, gift, and legacy contained in my said will to or for the benefit of my same son, and I revoke and annul every provision and benefit thereby given, made, or intended to or for him; and I further direct that every clause of my said will purporting to entitle him to share any part or parts of my estate or of the proceeds, income, or profits thereof with any other person or persons shall be construed, and the directions and trusts thereof shall be carried out, as if the name of my said son George William Whitehorne had never appeared therein, and I direct that my same son shall not at any time be appointed manager of my business or be employed therein nor become a trustee of my will."

By paragraph 2 the testator directed his executors to set apart out of his residuary estate £500 and invest it, and hold the investments upon trust for the maintenance and benefit of the children living at his death of his son G. W. Whitehorne equally, and upon such children successively attaining the age of twenty-one, or marrying being females, upon trust to transfer to them their respective shares; and the testator declared that his executors should not pay the income of the said legacy or any part thereof to his son G. W. Whitehorne, pursuant to section 43 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

The testator died in October, 1894.

George W. Whitehorne died in 1899, leaving three infant children, the infant plaintiffs. He did not appoint or purport to appoint the trust property. At the time of the summons the testator's widow had died and his daughters were married. His sons Alfred Whitehorne and George Frederick Whitehorne had assigned their shares and interests under the will to their sister Mrs. Ebdon. The youngest son, Edward James Whitehorne, had lately attained his age of twenty-one years. Mrs. Ebdon and Edward James Whitehorne contended that the codicil had revoked not only the interest of George W. Whitehorne, but also the interests of his children; and that in consequence the shares of the remaining sons had become augmented, and that Mrs. Ebdon held two-thirds and Edward J. Whitehorne one-third of the devised property. Under these circumstances the three infant children of George W. Whitehorne by their next friend took out this summons against the trustees of the will and Mrs. Ebdon and the other daughters of the testator for the determination of this among other questions.

Buckmaster, K.C., and Stevenson, for the plaintiff.—A gift in a will is only revoked by plain words in a codicil, and the revocation only extends as far as it makes the will inconsistent with the codicil: Green v. Tribe, 27 W. R. 39 47 L. J. Ch. 783. Here the only plain revocation is of the life interest of George W. Whitehorne. The interests of his children are not expressly or plainly revoked, and stand good. The cases of Philipps v. Allen, 7 Sim. 446; Boulcott v. Boulcott, 2 Drew. 25; and Sanford v. Sanford, 1 De G. & Sm. 67, which may be relied on against us, were cited in Green v. Tribe. [BUCKLEY, J., referred to Alt v. Gregory, 8 D. G. M. & G. 221.] The interests of the children of George W. Whitehorne are accelerated by the revocation of his life interest: Green v. Tribe.

J. A. Hay, for the trustees of the will.

Maw, for two of the daughters of the testator.—The words revoking the shares of the children are plain. If the name of George William Whitehorne is omitted from clause 6 as expressly directed, then his children cannot take. The case is substantially the same as Tabor v. Prentice, 32 W. R. 872, the words in the codicil revoking every devise or bequest "to or in favour of" the son, in that case being equivalent to the revocation of every gift "to or for the benefit of" the son which occur here; and in that case the children's interests were held to be revoked. The gift to the children of the son would be a gift "for his benefit," and consistently with that view the testator directs that the income of the £500 during the minority of the children shall not be paid to him.

Gatey, for Mrs. Ebdon, used similar arguments.

BUCKLEY, J.—The principle which in this case I have to apply is simply this, that if there is a plain gift by will the person who asserts that the gift is revoked must show a plain revocation by codicil—that is plain upon the construction of the language used. Further, I have to apply this principle, that a revocation only extends so far as the will is inconsistent with the codicil which is said to revoke it. In the present case the will contains certain provisions for the benefit of the testator's son George William, and also gifts for the benefit of his children. It is not the case of an original gift to the son with subsequent directions as to the manner in which that gift is to be enjoyed; there is a gift to the son for life, and then a gift to his children afterwards. In construing the codicil something turns upon the recital in it. The testator recites that he is dissatisfied with his son, and has ceased to employ him in his business. This relates to the son personally, and has nothing to do with his children. The testator then goes on to make a certain revocation, the effect of which I have to consider. There is no authority which lays down the principle of construction except as I have stated it. Three cases—Philipps v. Allen, Sanford v. Sanford, and Boulcott v. Boulcott—have been cited, in each of which not merely the gift to the person in question is held to be revoked, but the whole gift is held to be revoked. But in each of these cases the decision turned on the particular language and not upon any principle. So also was the case in Tabor v. Prentice, where also it was held that the gift to the persons in remainder was revoked. In Green v. Tribe and in Alt v. Gregory the gifts to the persons in remainder were held not to be revoked. From these cases can be obtained the principle to be followed. The observations of Turner, L.J., in Alt v. Gregory, on p. 236, are pertinent. I think that the testator here has made a recital which shows his intention to dispossess the son, but which stops short of dispossessing the son's children. Hence the case of Green v. Tribe, decided by Fry, J., is very like the one before me. In that case there was a gift in the will to the niece for life with remainder to her children, followed by a codicil which revoked every gift in the will "to or in favour of my niece." Fry, J., held that the revocation extended only to the interest of the niece and that the interests of the children were accelerated. In Tabor v. Prentice, Kay, J., in holding that the interests of the children were revoked, relied principally upon the words "to or in favour of" his son contained in the revocation, and also upon the fact that Knight-Bruce, L.J., had arrived at the same conclusion in an unreported decision. I am not pressed in the present case with the words "in favour of" or "for the benefit of," because the testator had in his will in addition to gifts given his son certain benefits. The words "for the benefit of my son" are satisfied by his having given to the trustees power to employ the sons in the business, and of purchasing the other shares and interests of his brothers. The actual words of revocation are "I hereby revoke each and every devise, bequest, gift, and legacy contained in my said will to or for the benefit of my same son." These words are satisfied without the children being intended at all. Then the testator goes on, "and I revoke and annul every provision and benefit thereby given, made, or intended to or for him," again stopping short of any reference to the son's children. Then he continues, "and I further direct that every clause in my said will" [His lordship read the rest of the paragraph.] It has been argued that the word "clause" refers to each numbered paragraph in the will. This, however, cannot be so, as it would make all the gifts to the brothers of George William fail. The word "clause" refers only to every sentence in the will in which anything is given to George William. Another argument made use of is based upon the provision in the will that George William Whitehorne is not to receive the income of the legacy of £500 given by the codicil to his children. That is true; but there is nothing in that provision to lead me to a different conclusion. I consider that the principle upon which the cases of Green v. Tribe and Alt v. Gregory were decided apply to this case, and I hold that the codicil does not revoke the interests given to the children of George William Whitehorne by the will, but that these remain and are accelerated.

Landlord and tenant—Illegal distress—Trespass ab initio—Right of landlord to make fresh levy.

A landlord levied a distress for rent. The bailiff illegally entered the house by breaking the chain of the front door and seized furniture belonging to the plaintiff. . . . After remaining in possession some days he went out and was refused re-admission, and made no attempt to re-enter. Subsequently the landlord levied a fresh distress for the same rent, whereupon the plaintiff brought an action for replevin against him.

Held, affirming the decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 216), that the second distress was a legal distress.

Appeal from the judgments of Kennedy and Ridley, JJ., on appeal from the Waltham County Court.

The appellant was the wife of a tenant of a house which had been let to the husband by the respondent.

At Midsummer, 1904, two quarters' rent were in arrears, and on the 19th of July the landlord put in a distress.

The bailiff entered the house by forcibly breaking the chain of the front door, and seized furniture which admittedly belonged to the appellant.

The bailiff remained in possession eleven days, and then left the house for two hours, was refused re-admission, and made no attempt to re-enter.

On the 5th of August a fresh distress for the same rent was levied by a different bailiff under a fresh warrant, and goods were seized which were to some extent different from those seized on the previous occasion.

The goods were removed and advertised for sale, whereupon the appellant took the necessary steps to replevy her goods, and in due course brought her action in the county court. Before the replevin became effectual the appellant and her husband had brought an action in the High Court against the respondent, in which they claimed damages in respect of the illegal entry on the 19th of July, and the appellant had brought a further action in the High Court in which she claimed the restoration of the goods seized on the 5th of August, together with an injunction against the respondent selling or dealing with them. These actions had not been pursued after the present action of replevin had been brought.

The county court judge held that the first proceeding was upon the authority of Attack v. Bramwell, 3 B. & S. 220, a trespass ab initio and void as a distress, and that the subsequent distress for the same rent was lawful. The Divisional Court affirmed the decision. The plaintiff now appealed.

Foa, for the appellant, repeated the argument advanced in the court below (54 W. R. 216).

Martin Smith and Morle, for the respondent, were not called upon.

THE COURT (Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., GORELL BARNES P., and FARWELL, L.J.) dismissed the appeal, and adopted simpliciter the judgments of the learned judges below (54 W. R., p. 217).

SMITH v. STANDARD STEAM FISHING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Shipwright—Ship moored to jetty of dock—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7.

A workman employed to do repairs in a ship, which though attached to the jetty of a dock by a rope is wholly waterborne, and is not making use of the dock in any way, is not a workman entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, inasmuch as the person sued is not the occupier of a factory, and, therefore, not an "undertaker" within the Act.

Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin, 53 W. R. 609, [1905] A. C. 220 followed.

This was an appeal from the Lincolnshire County Court, which raised the question whether a shipwright who had sustained an injury on the deck of a steam trawler while moored to the quay in Grimsby Docks was entitled to compensation from the owners of the vessel under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The facts were as follow: The applicant, S. H. Smith, was at the time of the accident, and had been for some years preceding it, a shipwright in the employ of the respondents, who are steam trawler owners at Great Grimsby, and used to work for them either in the workshop or on the quay or on vessels in the dock, according to orders and as occasion might require.

On the 31st of October, 1904, the applicant was instructed to go on board the steam trawler The Moravia, which belonged to the respondents, to do some repairs. The Moravia was moored to the jetty or landing-stage of the fish dock at Grimsby, being fastened forward by her fore rope to the jetty and aft by her aft rope to other trawlers which were lying alongside of her; the fore end touched the jetty, and the applicant went on board of her by stepping from the jetty on to the trawler. While the applicant and two other men were pulling at a rope to get at the otter or trawl board, which the applicant was told to repair, the rope broke, the applicant fell on his back on the deck across the wheel chain-pipe and broke his leg in two places. The applicant claimed compensation, and eventually proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, were taken in the Grimsby County Court. The county court judge held, on the authority of Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin, 53 W. R. 609, [1905] A. C. 220, that the applicant being on board a trawler in a wet dock, and the trawler not making use of the dock in any way, the trawler was not a "factory" within the decisions under the Act, and that the respondents were not "undertakers" within the meaning of the Act, and consequently they were not liable to pay compensation.

The applicant appealed.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of the county court judge in a case where a trawler was moored (I think I may say) in a wet dock and was attached to the jetty by a rope. The plaintiff was a shipwright and was employed to mend trawl boards on board this trawler, and in the process he met with an accident which broke his leg. He was on the ship during the whole course of the employment and the accident, except that he had to get on board the ship, I presume, from the jetty, and therefore what happened to him happened to him while he was on board the ship. He then claims against the owners of the trawler compensation under the Workman's Compensation Act, 1897. He is met at once by the decision in the House of Lords in the recent case of Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin. It is not perhaps quite easy to collect from the speeches of the learned lords what is the essential principle which governs them all, but I think there is one common factor or one common conclusion in all their judgments, whether arrived at by the same reasoning in each case I do not pretend to decide. I think that they all come to the conclusion that in that particular case the person sued was not the occupier of a factory, and therefore not an undertaker, and therefore that the plaintiff could not get compensation. It seems to me that the principle is common to all the judgments in that case. Lord Halsbury, on p. 222, says: "I do not think the ship owner was in any intelligible sense the occupier of the dock because his vessel was in the water surrounded by the structure of the dock." In this case this vessel was entirely waterborne, and it had no relation to the structure of the dock excepting the fact that there was a rope used for mooring it; but the actual work which the injured man was doing had no relation whatever to the structure of the dock. He had merely walked across it for the purpose of getting on to the ship, and the work he had to do was exclusively on the ship and had nothing whatever to do with the stone structure of the dock. Then comes Lord Macnaghten, who also, I think, bases his judgment on the same ground: "It is, I think, plain," he says on p. 224, "that by the expression 'dock' in the Factory Act, 1895, is meant the solid structure and body of the dock, not the water space within its limits. A corresponding meaning must be given to the word 'premises.' I do not think that a ship lying in a dock, whether afloat or not, can be included in the description of 'premises within the same or forming part thereof.' It follows, therefore, in my opinion, that the employment in which the injured person was engaged at the time of the accident was not an employment to which the Act of 1897 applies"; and he explains that a little further on by reference to Raine v. Jobson. "The case of Raine v. Jobson seems to me to be a different case altogether. There the vessel was not lying in the water space of the dock. It had been removed to and placed in a dry dock—in a berth in a dock—of which the persons sought to be made liable had the actual use and occupation." Therefore, it seems to me that he again treats the occupation as a crucial point, and holds that the persons sued in that case were not in occupation of the factory. and therefore not undertakers towards the plaintiff. Then Lord Lindley, on p. 228, says: "To treat the owner of a ship afloat in a dock, and waiting to get out to sea, as the occupier of a factory, and therefore an undertaker within the meaning of the Act, appears to me opposed to all good sense and not to be rendered obligatory by section 7." It seems to me that those observations apply to this case. In fact, the only difference between the two is that there was no doubt a rope physically connecting the trawler with the jetty, whereas in Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin the ship was entirely disconnected from the land; but the observations as to occupation of the dock appear to me to apply equally in both cases, because the place where this man was actually employed was not on the stone structure adjacent to the water, but in the ship which was entirely waterborne, and therefore I think that that principle, if it be a principle, applies as much to one case as the other. Therefore, in my judgment, the case fails, and this appeal must be dismissed.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is clear that if the fishing smack had been not inside a dock and had wanted the repair done to the trawling board, and had sent for a carpenter ashore and got him to come off and do this work on board the trawler, that fact would not in itself have made the trawler a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The question is whether it makes all the difference that the carpenter came on board for the purpose of repairing the trawler board when the trawler was afloat in the Grimsby Dock. Now, it appears to me that the case is really governed by the principle of the decision in Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin, for doing the best I can (and I hope I have been successful) to extract from the judgments of the majority of the lords who decided that case, the principles upon which they decided it, I think it appears that two principles were laid down — one, that seamen employed in performing their ordinary duties as seamen afloat and on board the ship were outside the general provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, unless, of course, there was anything special in their work to take them outside the ordinary position of seamen; and the second principle I think laid down in the decision in the House of Lords was this—that a ship afloat in a dock does not of necessity become part of the dock or premises within the dock so that the owner of a ship which was afloat within a wet dock would not merely because of that circumstance become "the person having the actual use or occupation of a dock or of any premises within the same or forming part thereof" so as to be deemed the occupiers of a factory. You must look, as I gather from that case, to the circumstances to see whether the owners have brought themselves or not by something special that they are doing within the operation of the Act. I think I am right in saying that those are the two principles which are pointed out for our guidance in the case of Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin. Now I apply them to the present case. Of course the first principle has no application because the present workman was not a seaman; but it appears to me that the second principle does apply. What are the circumstances of the case? You have here a trawler coming into the dock as a floating ship, and I cannot gather that it came in for any special purpose of being repaired so as, by occupation of any particular part of the dock, to use its position in any way except for the purpose of floating in the dock. It may be possible for all I know that it came in merely for the purpose of discharging its fish; I do not know. At any rate nothing special is made of what it was doing inside the dock. It was floating in the water. While there it sends for a carpenter to come and repair the trawling board. Does that circumstance alone justify us in holding that the owners of this trawler are "persons having the actual occupation of the dock or of any premises within the dock or forming part of it"? I think, having regard to what was said in the case in the House of Lords to which I have called attention, that we cannot say that. As my lord has pointed out, the mere circumstance of the rope going from the bow of the vessel to the side of the dock, as it always does in these cases of trawlers discharging cargo or being temporarily in a dock, cannot make a difference. That played a wholly immaterial part in the transaction the subject of this appeal. For these reasons I think the decision of the county court judge is right, and the appeal fails.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It would be, in my view, extremely difficult to extract any clear logical principles from the speeches in the House of Lords in the case of the Houlder Line (Limited) v. Griffin. On the whole I think that those principles are those which have been stated by the Master of the Rolls and Romer, L.J. I would only add this with reference to the Houlder case, that the distinction which was painfully sought to be made in the present case, that here the fishing smack was in a sense connected with the structure of the dock by means of a rope, was really an element which existed in the Houlder case, because the vessel there was moored to a buoy in the dock, but even if I did not think as I do, that the case is governed by the Houlder Line case, having had my attention called to the case of Thompson v. Sinclair, I confess I do not think it is open to us in this court to take any other view than that which has been taken. Thompson v. Sinclair was a case very much more favourable to the workman than the present case. There the vessel had been taken into the dock, she had no crew on board, and she was moored to the side of the quay; and the county court judge thought that that distinguished the case from the Houlder case. Nevertheless this court held that it was governed by the principle in the Houlder case, the vessel being really afloat in the dock, and the work in which the man was engaged not being work which referred to or involved the conduct of business on the dock or the quay. For these reasons I think the appeal fails.

Landlord and tenant — Covenant to repair — Lessor's liability — Old building — Natural decay — Construction.

The principle of construction that, under a covenant to repair, the covenantor need not renew a building worn out by age or decaying from faulty construction applies to the case of a lessor as well as to the case of a lessee who has entered into such a covenant; and for the purpose of construing such a covenant there is in this respect no distinction between the two cases.

This was an action by the assignee of the lessee of an old house against the lessor (the assignee of the original lessor) for an injunction and for damages for an alleged breach by the lessor of a covenant binding her to keep the outside of the premises in repair.

By an indenture of lease made in 1890 the lessor demised to the lessee the first, second, and third floors, with two rooms and partial use of kitchen in the basement, and the yard of a messuage No. 8, Glasshouse-street, and No. 1, Sherwood-street, Regent-street, London, for eighteen years from the 25th of March, 1890, at the rent of £150.

The lessee covenanted that he would at all times keep the inside of the premises in good and substantial repair, and would permit the lessor twice or thrice during the term to enter upon the premises and view the condition thereof, and that the lessee would not during the term carry on or permit to be carried on any trade or business upon the premises, or permit the same to be occupied or used in any other manner than as a private hotel. The lease also contained the following covenant:

"And the lessor doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, covenant with the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in manner following—that is to say, that the lessor, his executors, administrators, or assigns, will pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever (except gas and water rates) which now are, or during the said term shall be, imposed or assessed upon the said demised premises, or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise; and also will at all times during the said term keep the outside of the said premises in good and substantial repair, and in particular will paint with two coats at least of good oil colour, and in a proper and workmanlike manner, the outside wood and ironwork of the said premises once in every four years of the said term."

It was upon this latter covenant that the question in the case turned.

By an indenture dated the 20th of January, 1905, the defendant, in whom the reversion had become vested, demised the premises for a further term of one and a-half years (less three days) to the lessee upon the same conditions as those of the first lease.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Torrens, was the assignee of the premises for the term as thus extended under an indenture dated the 21st of January, 1905.

On the 13th of July, 1905, the said plaintiff was served with a dangerous structure notice by the London County Council. She thereupon, by a letter of the same date, through her solicitors gave the solicitors of the defendant notice of what had happened, and of the state of repair of the building, and called his attention to the covenants on the part of the lessor in the lease. The house was so immediately dangerous that the council shored it up. Mrs. Torrens gave notice to her guests that they must leave, and they did so. Nothing, however, was done by either the said plaintiff or defendant, and, the surveyor of the council having certified that the structure was in a dangerous state, a magistrate's order was made in September, 1905, ordering the owner to take down the walls so far as they were decayed and out of form, and to secure the same to the satisfaction of the surveyor. By the time of the trial the council had pulled down part of the walls and left the house as a shell.

The plaintiff Mrs. Torrens had agreed to sell the premises to the Sherwood Hotel Co. (Limited), who were also joined as plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs brought this action against the assignee of the reversion claiming an injunction to restrain him from hindering their enjoyment for the business of a private hotel of the premises by keeping the outside thereof out of repair and unfit for occupation, and also claiming damages.

The defendant in his defence alleged that if the outside walls became cracked and the hereditaments unfit for use and uninhabitable, as alleged (which was not admitted), the same was due to the age of the premises and the natural operation of time and the elements thereon, and that he had merely a leasehold interest which expired in September, 1909.

Jenkins, K.C., and Greenwood, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant is bound to keep the buildings in repair, and must, if necessary, rebuild them: Jacob v. Down, 48 W. R. 441, [1900] 2 Ch. 156. Moreover, the lessor let the house for a particular purpose—namely, to be used as a private hotel, and he was bound to keep it in such a state of repair as to be fit for that purpose.

Upjohn, K.C., and J. W. Manning, for the defendant.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

—The liability of a landlord to repair only arises after notice of the state of the premises being given him by the lessee: Makin v. Watkinson, 19 W. R. 286, L. R. 6 Exch. 25; Huggatt v. Maclean, 1 Cab. & Ell. 391, and on appeal 53 L. T. 94. The defendant did not receive notice of the state of the buildings until the 13th of July, 1905—that is, therefore, the material date. At that time the buildings could not be made safe by repairs, nothing could be done but to rebuild them from the first floor. The house was within a few years of being 200 years old. A covenant to repair does not extend to structural defects (Huggatt v. Maclean), nor to natural decay: Gutteridge v. Munyard, 1 M. & Rob. 334, 7 C. & P. 129; Payne v. Haine, 16 M. & W. 541; Lister v. Lane & Nesham, 41 W. R. 626, [1893] 2 Q. B. 212; Wright v. Lawson, W. N. 1903, p. 108. Jacob v. Down was the case of the duty of the tenant to build premises under a covenant to leave them in good repair, and was quite a different case.

Greenwood, in reply.—Although the notice was not given until July, 1905, yet the breach took place previously; the notice does not cause the breach, but merely calls the attention of the landlord to it. [WARRINGTON, J.—I think there is no breach until notice; Bramwell, B., in Makin v. Watkinson, L. R. 6 Exch, at p. 28, says that the covenant is equivalent to a covenant to repair on notice.]

WARRINGTON, J.—I find as a fact, in accordance with the evidence of the district surveyor, that the building, which is about 200 years old, is absolutely worn out and has come to the end of its time, and that its condition is not owing to any neglect on the part of the lessor, but to the effect of time and the elements on the materials of which it was composed. It was found on the survey that the front wall was beyond repair. The bricks had come to such a state that they could not be used again, and the mortar was perished. The back wall was not in such a bad condition. But I find as a fact with regard to the whole of the back wall above the first floor that nothing short of rebuilding could have been of any avail, and it was probable that when the work was begun it would have been found necessary to rebuild both walls from below the first floor. I find therefore as a fact that on the 13th of July, 1905, repairing the building was in the ordinary sense impossible. Nothing could be done but rebuild. It was not merely the course which a prudent owner would have adopted, but it was the only course practicable to make the structure stand. On these facts what is the law? It is settled—at least so far as I am concerned—that a covenant by a lessor to keep the external walls or any part of the building in repair means a covenant to repair upon notice, but not otherwise. This was decided in Makin v. Watkinson, and again by the Court of Appeal in Huggatt v. Maclean, where it was treated as settled law. As, therefore, the lessor had not notice of the state in which the building was until the 13th of July, 1905, there could be no breach of the covenant before that date. Was there, then, any breach of the covenant on or after that date? As to that I have already described the state of the buildings, and having regard to its condition I am of opinion that there was no breach of this covenant. It is sufficient for me to take the law from Lister v. Lane & Nesham and from Proudfoot v. Hart, 38 W. R. 730, 25 Q. B. D. 42. In the former case, where it was held that the defect having been caused by the natural operation of time upon a house the original construction of which was faulty, the lessees were not under their covenant liable to make it good. Lord Esher cited the passage in the judgment of Tindal, L.C.J., in Gutteridge v. Munyard, "When a very old building is demised, and the lessee enters into a covenant to repair, it is not meant that the old building is to be restored in a renewed form at the end of the term or of greater value than it was at the commencement of the term. What the natural operation of time flowing on effects, and all that the elements bring about in diminishing the value constitute a loss which, as far as it results from time and nature, falls upon the landlord"; and the learned judge subsequently said, "These cases seem to me to show that if a tenant takes a house which is of such a kind that by its own inherent nature it will in course of time fall into a particular condition, the effects of that result are not within the tenant's covenant to repair. However large the words of the covenant may be, a covenant to repair a house is not a covenant to give back a different thing from that which the tenant took when he entered into the covenant. He has to repair that thing which he took; he is not obliged to make a new and different thing; and, moreover, the result of the nature and condition of the house itself, the result of time upon that state of things, is not a breach of the covenant to repair." In Proudfoot v. Hart where it was a question of the tenant's obligation under his covenant Cave, J., said, at p. 45, "So with regard to the walls, the floor, the windows, and all the different parts of the house, the tenant is bound where there is a breakage, whether arising from his own fault or from some external accident, to repair it to the best of his ability; but he is never bound where a portion of the structure has become absolutely worn out and necessary to be replaced, to substitute a new structure in the place of it. All that he undertakes to do is to patch the thing up so long as it is, in the nature of things, right and reasonable that the thing should be patched up. But when it has got to such a state that patching up is of no avail—and we know that things do at last get to that state—then the tenant is not bound to put in anything new, or to pay any proportion of the cost of putting in the new thing, because the old one has become unfit to discharge its duty." I admit that there is some difference between those cases and this; but the principle there laid down governs the law I have to apply. But it has been remarked that those cases are cases upon the liability of a lessee, and it is contended that they do not apply to the case of a lessor. There is, however, in reality no distinction between the one case and the other. If the lessee is not bound to give back to the lessor a different thing from that which was demised to him, neither, in my judgment, is the lessor bound by a similar covenant to give to the lessee for the rest of the term a different thing from that which the lessee took from him at the beginning of his tenancy. If no such distinction exists then every word of what Lord Esher said in the passage I have read applies to the present case, and regard must be had to the state of things existing on the 13th of July, 1905. The house had fallen into the condition described by Cave, J., in Proudfoot v. Hart, when patching up was of no avail. Here we have a house which from its inherent nature had fallen into such a condition that to repair it was out of the question, and it was found necessary to rebuild the front walls and the greater part of the back wall, which is not within the covenant to repair. But it is said that there is another reason why Lister v. Lane & Nesham must be put out of account. It is said that there the condition of things in that case had arisen from faulty construction of the house. But in this case also in reality the state of the house was the ultimate result of faulty construction. A house may be built to last 300 or 400 years without becoming dangerous. The state of the house resulted from the effect of time upon the materials used. In this respect also, then, Lister v. Lane & Nesham is an authority in the defendant's favour. Then it is said that this construction will inflict hardship upon the lessee. But to construe the covenant the other way would inflict equal hardship upon the lessor, who is herself a lessee. I put aside all questions of hardship and only consider the legal effect of the covenant. Upon the principle I have stated I hold that there has been no breach of the covenant by the defendant.

REX v. JOHN BOND. (a.)

Criminal law—Medical practitioner—Illegal use of instruments—Admissibility of evidence of felonious use of similar instruments on another woman some nine months before—"Mistake" or "accident"—Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 58.

The prisoner, a medical man, was indicted for feloniously using certain instruments on a certain woman with intent to procure her miscarriage. At the trial the prosecution called as a witness another woman, whose evidence was to the effect that some nine months previously the prisoner had used similar instruments on her, with the avowed intention of bringing about her miscarriage, and that he had then used expressions tending to show that he was in the habit of performing similar operations for the same illegal purpose. The evidence was admitted, and the prisoner was convicted.

Held (by Kennedy, Darling, Jelf, Bray, and A. T. Lawrence, JJ., Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., dissenting), that the evidence was rightly admitted, and that the conviction must be upheld.

Case stated by A. T. Lawrence, J., for the opinion of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved.

"John Bond was tried before me at Chester at the winter assizes holden for the county of Chester on the 15th and the 16th of March, 1906, on an indictment under section 58 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, for feloniously using instruments upon one Ethel Annie Jones with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of the said Ethel Annie Jones on the 20th day of October, 1905. Evidence of admissions by the prisoner of the use of instruments upon the said Ethel Annie Jones was given by the witnesses for the prosecution, but it was suggested that such use was for a lawful purpose and with no criminal intent. The evidence of one Gertrude Sandles Taylor was tendered for the prosecution to show intent. It was objected to by the learned counsel for the prisoner on the ground that such evidence was inadmissible, inasmuch as there were other indictments awaiting trial against the prisoner for offences against the same statute in respect of acts alleged to have been done by the prisoner to the said Gertrude Sandles Taylor in January, 1905, that such acts had no reference to Ethel Annie Jones and were not evidence of the intent with which the prisoner had used the instruments upon the said Ethel Annie Jones. I was of opinion, upon the authority of Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215, and the other cases cited to me, that the evidence was admissible. The evidence of Gertrude Sandles Taylor was given. A copy of my note of such evidence accompanies this case, and may be referred to as part thereof. I left the question to the jury as to whether or not the prisoner had used the instruments with the intent alleged in the indictment, and told them that unless they were satisfied he had such intent they should find him not guilty. The jury found prisoner guilty. I sentenced him to three years' penal servitude, but respited the execution of the sentence until after the decision of this case. I admitted the prisoner to bail. The question for the opinion of the court is whether the evidence of Gertrude Sandles Taylor was admissible. If the evidence was admissible the conviction is to stand, if inadmissible the conviction is to be quashed.—A. T. LAWRENCE."

The evidence of Gertrude Sandles Taylor as shown on the judge's note appended to the case sufficiently appears in the judgments.

B. Francis Williams, K.C. (Ellis Griffith with him), for the prisoner.—The evidence was inadmissible. The broad principle is that in order to prove that a man has been guilty of one crime evidence that he has been guilty of another is not admissible: Reg. v. Rearden, 14 W. R. 663, 4 F. & F. 76. The only exceptions to this rule are where evidence of previous criminal acts has been admitted either to show malice, to prove guilty knowledge, to negative accident, or to shew that the prisoner was acting on a system. There was no system here. Only one other case is tendered in evidence, and that cannot create a system. Nor is there any nexus or connection between the cases of the two women. The case is not within the principle of any case in which similar evidence has been admitted: Reg. v. Oddy, 5 Cox C. C. 210, 2 Den. C. C. 264; Reg. v. Ollis, 49 W. R. 76, [1900] 2 Q. B. 758; Reg. v. Rhodes, 47 W. R. 121, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; Reg. v. Francis, 24 W. R. 663, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215; Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, [1894] A. C. 57; Reg. v. Heesom, (1878) 14 Cox C. C. 40; Reg. v. Dale, (1889) 16 Cox C. C. 703; Reg. v. Holt, (1860) 8 Cox C. C. 411; Reg. v. Winslow, (1860) 8 Cox C. C. 397; Rex v. Wyatt, 52 W. R. 285, [1904] 1 K. B. 188. The ground on which the validity of the conviction was appealed against was that the judge had wrongly admitted the evidence of Taylor. In her evidence she had said that the prisoner had told her "he had put dozens of girls right," and that the instruments he used, which she recognized as similar to those he had used on Jones, would fetch away the child. The prisoner's defence to the charge was that Jones came to him suffering from a disease in the womb which justified him using certain instruments on her, and that if the miscarriage Jones charged him with having procured was due to his having used the instruments which he admitted having used on her, the instruments were not used by him for a criminal purpose and there being no evidence of any criminal intent to procure abortion he could not have been convicted but for the evidence of this witness, which he submitted was not admissible.

Abel Thomas, K.C. (R. V. Bankes with him), for the prosecution.—The evidence of Gertrude Taylor is admissible as showing that the prisoner admitted that he had done the act before for the purpose of getting girls out of trouble, and is therefore evidence of the design or intent with which he used the instruments and is also evidence of a system. It is impossible to prove system except by calling evidence of specific instances. The cases are summed up in Archibald's Criminal Pleadings (23rd ed.), pp. 308, 309; Roscoe's Criminal Evidence (12th ed.), pp. 85, 86. Where there is a question whether an act was accidental, the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is deemed to be relevant: Stephen's Digest of Law of Evidence (6th ed.), article 12.

He also referred to Rex v. Mogg, 4 C. & P. 364; Reg. v. Dossett, 2 C. & K. 306.

B. Francis Williams, K.C., replied.

The case was argued first before five judges who disagreed. The court, having directed the case to be re-argued on the 26th of May, was differently constituted. Walton, J., who was present at the first hearing, being absent, and Jelf, Bray, and A. T. Lawrence, JJ., being invited to attend.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 12.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the following judgment: In this case the defendant was indicted under section 58 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 for feloniously using instruments upon one Ethel Annie Jones on the 25th of October, 1905, with intent thereby to procure miscarriage. It was not disputed that in fact the accused had used instruments, but it was suggested that they were used for a lawful purpose and with no criminal intent. At the trial the evidence of a girl named Gertrude Taylor was tendered and admitted. The evidence of this witness was to the effect that in January, 1905, she had been staying at the house of the accused; that he had connection with her; and that subsequently thereby she was pregnant, she had informed the prisoner, and that he used instruments of the same character upon her with a view to procure miscarriage. My brother Lawrence upon the authority of Reg. v. Geering, 18 L J. M. C. 215, Reg v. Dale, 16 Cox C. C. 703, and other cases cited before him, admitted the evidence, and the question raised is whether it was rightly admitted. The general rule of law applicable in such cases can, I think, be clearly stated. It is that, apart from express statutory enactments, evidence tending to show that the accused had been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment cannot be given unless the acts sought to be proved are so connected with the offence charged as to form part of the evidence upon which it is proved: see Reg. v. Reardon, 14 W. R. 663, 4 F. & F. 76; or are material to the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime were designed or accidental: see Reg. v. Gray, 14 W. R. 671, 4 F. & F. 1102; or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused: see Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, [1894] A. C. 65. As is pointed out in the last-mentioned case, the statement of these general principles is easy; in applying them it is often very difficult to draw the line and decide whether a particular piece of evidence is admissible or not. In this case it was not disputed that the prisoner had in fact used the instruments upon the girl Jones either, as he suggested, for a lawful purpose or, as it was alleged by the prosecution, for an unlawful purpose. Can it be said that the fact that he had used instruments for an unlawful purpose upon another girl some nine months before has any bearing upon the purpose for which they were used on the occasion in question? It is, I think, easy to give illustrations of cases in which such evidence would clearly be admissible, as, for instance, if the prosecution alleged that the accused was carrying on the business of an abortionist, and had with that object, and with that object only, on several occasions used instruments or provided drugs for reward or remuneration to himself, or if the purpose for which the particular instruments could be used being doubtful, it was alleged that any injury caused by such use was accidental. In such cases it seems to me that evidence of the kind would be admissible, as was recently pointed out in this court in the case of Rex v. Wyatt, 52 W. R. 285, [1904] 1 K. B. 188, following Reg. v. Rhodes, 47 W. R. 121, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, and Reg. v. Ollis, 49 W R. 76, [1900] 2 Q B. 753, at pp. 764-8. I have grave doubt whether the circumstances of this case are sufficient to render the evidence admissible upon the principle recognized in these cases. Primâ facie there was no necessary connection between the act charged in the present indictment and the act alleged in the evidence admitted. It might possibly be suggested that, inasmuch as it was proved or admitted that the accused had improper intercourse with the two girls Jones and Taylor, and that both of them as the result of such intercourse had become pregnant, the evidence tended to establish a system or course of conduct on the part of the prisoner in cases in which he had got girls into trouble. I think, however, that this ground is too dangerous and not sufficient to justify the admission of the evidence. I must not, however, be supposed to decide that there might not be cases in which the evidence would have been admissible on such grounds, but this does not appear to me to be one of them. Nor does it by any means follow that evidence will be inadmissible on the ground only that it goes to prove only one other criminal act and not of a number. There may be other circumstances showing the act sought to be proved to be part of a criminal practice or system of which the criminal offence charged in the indictment formed part. The mere fact that the evidence tendered pointed to only one act is not conclusive against the admissibility. I would point out that in the case of Reg. v. Geering, Reg. v. Gray, and Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales the evidence was clearly admissible in order to rebut the allegation of accident or mistake. In this case assuming as I have said the grounds upon which the evidence might be admitted not to apply, the case would appear to me to resemble Reg. v. Oddy, in which, before the statute 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 19, evidence of the possession by the prisoner of property other than that charged in the indictment stolen from other persons was held not admissible. It is necessary, however, that I should refer to the case of Reg. v. Dale tried at the Central Criminal Court on the 16th of August, 1889, when, upon an indictment under this section for using a quill to bring about a miscarriage, counsel for the prosecution referred in his opening statement to evidence he intended to call to prove that the person charged had made use of a quill for a similar purpose on other occasions. Charles, J., ruled that evidence of similar acts of the prisoner practised on different women, both prior and subsequent to the offence charged in the indictment, would be admissible. If that case is to be construed to authorize the admissibility of evidence of prior acts of a similar kind when the act is admitted, and the only question is the purpose for which it was done, it goes too far. The report is very meagre, but on reference to the report in the 115th vol. Sessions Cases I observe that the question was raised during Mr. Fulton's opening, and that at the conclusion of the opening the prisoner pleaded guilty, so that the point was never formally raised and argued. It may be that in that case the evidence was admissible upon some one or other of the grounds to which I have referred. My attention has been called by my brother Kennedy to the case of Reg. v. Cooper, (1849) 3 Cox C. C. 547. In my opinion the decision in that case may clearly be supported on the ground that the evidence tended to show that the accused knew the consequences of his act. If it is supposed to lay down a wider principle, and one which would cover this case, I do not agree with it, and I may add that it does not appear to be cited as an authority upon the point argued before us. I think it right to add that, had I thought the evidence admissible, the fact that it would have tended to establish that the accused had been guilty of another crime would not have rendered it inadmissible: see Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, Reg v. Rearden, and other cases. For the above reasons I think the evidence was inadmissible, and that the conviction should be quashed, but as the majority of the court are of a different opinion the conviction will stand.

KENNEDY, J., read the following judgment: In this case John Bond was charged with attempting to procure abortion by using instruments on the body of Ethel Annie Jones on the 20th of October, 1905. The question for the decision of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved is as to the admissibility of the evidence of another woman, Gertrude Sandles Taylor, who was called as a witness to depose that the accused nine months before had been guilty of the same crime upon her, and who in the course of her examination in chief stated that he had then used language to her indicating that previously he had been guilty of the same crime in many other cases.

In my judgment the question is one of great importance as affecting the fair trial of accused persons. It may be laid down as a general rule in criminal as in civil cases that the evidence must be confined to the point in issue: Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence in Criminal Cases (12th ed., 1898), pp. 78, 79. When a prisoner is charged with an offence it is of the utmost importance to him that the facts laid before the jury should consist exclusively of the transaction which forms the subject of the indictment which alone he can be expected to come prepared to answer. It is therefore a general rule that the facts proved must be strictly relevant to the particular charge and have no reference to any conduct of the prisoner unconnected with such charge; therefore it is not allowable to show on the trial on an indictment that the prisoner has a general disposition to commit the same kind of offence as that for which he stands indicted: Russell on Crimes (6th ed., 1896), vol. 3, p. 403. Thus it was resolved by all the judges nearly one hundred years ago in Rex v. Cole, 1 Mich. T. 1810, and cited from M.S. Russell on Crimes (6th ed.), vol. 3, p. 403, note (n), that in a prosecution for an infamous crime an admission by the prisoner that he had committed such an offence at another time and with another person, and that he has a tendency to such practices, ought not to be received in evidence. The law of England, said Lord Campbell, L.C.J., in Reg. v. Oddy, does not allow one crime to be proved in order to raise a presumption that another crime has been committed by the perpetrator of the first, and the same law has twelve years ago been restated in a judgment of the Privy Council: "It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to shew that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried": Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, [1894], A. C. 57, at p. 65. Then follows the passage on which reliance was placed by the counsel for the prosecution, but which I think it is not necessary here to quote. Nothing can so certainly be counted upon to make a prejudice against an accused upon his trial as the disclosure to the jury of other misconduct of a kind similar to that which is the subject of the indictment, and, indeed, when the crime alleged is one of a revolting character, such as the charge against Bond in the present case, and the auditor is a person who has not been trained to think judicially, the prejudice must sometimes be almost insurmountable. Therefore, if, as is plain, we have to recognize the existence of certain circumstances in which justice cannot be attained at the trial without a disclosure of prior offences, the utmost vigilance at least should be maintained in restricting the number of such cases, and in seeing that the general rule of the criminal law of England, which to the credit, in my opinion, of English justice excludes evidence of prior offences, is not broken or frittered away by the creation of novel and anomalous exceptions. So sacred in our courts has been the observance of this general rule that, on the trial of a prisoner who was indicted for stealing a shilling which had been marked and was found in his possession, evidence of the prisoner's own statement to the constable who arrested him as to his possession of the moneys of the prosecutor was ruled to be inadmissible because it related to another felony: Reg. v. Butler, (1846) 2 C. & K. 221. Equally significant, I think, has been the recognition of the general rule on the part of our Legislature. The provisions of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), forbid, except in special circumstances, any question as to other offences committed by the prisoner or as to his past bad character; a series of earlier statutes—including the Larceny Act, 1861, the Coinage Offences Act, 1861, and the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871—secure that when an indictment contains a charge relating to a previous conviction as well as a charge of a subsequent offence the prisoner shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and the jury, in the first instance, be charged only concerning the subsequent offence. When the Legislature by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 17, provided that, on the trial of a person charged with having received goods knowing them to be stolen or having stolen property in his possession, evidence might be given of such person having in his possession other stolen property, and that such evidence might be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property to be stolen which forms the subject of the proceedings against him, it qualified this provision by limiting the evidence to property stolen within a period of twelve months preceding the prosecution, and by the words "found in prisoner's possession" made it requisite, in order to show from such evidence a guilty knowledge in the prisoner, not merely to prove that other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months had at some time previously been dealt with by the prisoner, but also to prove that such other property was found in the prisoner's possession at the time when he was found in possession of the property which is the subject of the indictment. The established limitations of the general rule, and the apparent exceptions to it (see Reg. v. Carter, 32 W. R. 663, 12 Q. B. D. 522) at common law—to use the language of Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence, and Practice (23rd ed.), p. 306—are, I venture to think, at the present time reasonably plain and referable to definite and intelligible principles, although the discussion of the present case has amply shown it is not easy to say whether a particular case falls within the rule or within the apparent exceptions. The general rule cannot be applied where the facts which constitute distinct offences are at the same time part of the transaction which is the subject of the indictment. Evidence is necessarily admissible as to acts which are so closely and inextricably mixed up with the history of the guilty act itself as to form part of one chain of relevant circumstances, and so could not be excluded in the presentment of the case before the jury without the evidence being thereby rendered unintelligible. So in a case cited by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Whitley, (1804) 2 Leach 983, at p. 985, where a man committed three burglaries in one night and stole a shirt at one place and left it at another, and they were all so connected that the court heard the history of all the three burglaries. Lord Ellenborough remarked that "if several and distinct offences do so intermix and blend themselves with each other the detail of the party's whole conduct must be pursued." Instances are cited in Russell on Crimes (6th ed.), vol. 3, pp. 405-11; Archbold's Criminal Pleading (23rd ed.), pp. 307, 308. Reg. v. Firth, 17 W. R. 327, (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172, is a recent example of this class; Reg. v. Rearden, 14 W. R. 663, 4 F. & F. 76, illustrates the limitation upon the general rule in the case of rape. Willes, J., who presided at the trial in Reg. v. Rearden, cited in support of his ruling a case on the Western Circuit—a case of larceny of grain from a barn—in which he had admitted evidence of the owner of the barn that he had watched and detected several stealings by the same person. Such prior acts formed, in point of historical and circumstantial connection, inseparable parts of the transaction which the jury had to investigate. Within this same limitation I think come the cases of trials for murder and wounding with felonious intent, in which evidence is admissible to show prior assaults by the prisoner upon the murdered or injured person or menaces uttered to him by the prisoner, or to show conversely irritating behaviour by the deceased to the prisoner, as in Reg. v. Hagan, (1873) 12 Cox C. C. 357. The relation of the murdered or injured man to his assailant, so far as it may reasonably be treated as explanatory of the conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment, is properly admitted to proof as an integral part of the history of the alleged crime for which the accused is on his trial.

In my view, if we pass from the consideration of the necessary limitations which I have just illustrated, we shall find that the cases to which Archbold refers as apparent exceptions at common law to the general rule are cases in which evidence of transactions other than that which forms the subject of the indictment has been admitted as relevant to the issue as negativing the defence of accident or mistake in cases in which accident or mistake, if proved, would constitute a complete defence to the accusation. This is, I think, the principle upon which, in the group of reported murder cases, of which Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215; Reg. v. Cotton, (1873) 12 Cox C. C. 409; Reg. v. Roden, 12 Cox C. C. 630; and Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, [1894] A. C. 57, are familiar examples, evidence has been held admissible to prove the happening of like fatalities to persons other than the person with whose murder the prisoner is charged under circumstances in which these other fatalities may reasonably be connected with action on the part of the prisoner. Reg v. Geering may be taken as a type. On an indictment against a prisoner for the murder of her husband by arsenic in September, 1840, evidence was tendered by the prosecution of arsenic having been taken by the prisoner's two sons, one of whom died in December and the other in March subsequently, and also by a third son, who took arsenic in April following, but did not die. Proof was given of a similarity of symptoms in the four cases. Evidence was also tendered that the prisoner lived in the same house with her husband and sons, that she prepared their tea, cooked their victuals, and distributed them to the four parties. Held, that this evidence was admissible for the purpose of proving—first, that the deceased husband actually died of arsenic; secondly, that his death was not accidental; and that it was not inadmissible by reason of its tendency to prove or create a suspicion of a subsequent felony. In Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales the judgment of the Privy Council expressly approved the ruling in Reg. v. Geering, after a review of the cases; Lord Herschell, L.C. (who delivered judgment), remarking that it could not be denied that the decisions had not been completely in accord, and disapproving of the contrary ruling in Reg. v. Winslow, 8 Cox 397. It is really upon the same grounds that in a large number of cases, other than cases of murder, evidence of other prior acts of the prisoner, possibly themselves constituting crimes of the same nature as the charge upon which the prisoner is on his trial, has been admitted, although these prior acts do not historically form part of the circumstances of that charge. Here again the evidence has been admitted as negativing accident or mistake in regard to the occurrence which is the subject of the indictment. In all these cases it will, I think, be found that the occurrences of which evidence was admitted were occurrences connected with conduct on the part of the accused, so repeated and so closely linked in point of time as well as character with the offence for which the prisoner was on his trial, that according to the test of justice as well as of common sense there could be no serious challenge of its relevancy to the issue as to accident or mistake on the part of the accused in the particular case which formed the subject of the indictment. "When there is a question whether the act was accidental, the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is deemed to be relevant": Stephen's Digest of the Law of Evidence, art. 12. The principle was clearly stated by Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., when delivering the judgment of this court in Reg v. Rhodes, 47 W. R. 121, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, at p. 82. He quotes with approval the judgment of Lord Coleridge, L.C.J., in Reg. v. Francis, 22 W. R. 663, (1874) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128. The evidence "tends to show that he was pursuing a course of similar acts, and thereby it raises a presumption that he was not acting under a mistake. It is not conclusive, for a man may be many times under a similar mistake, or may be many times the dupe of another; but it is less likely he should be so often, than once, and every circumstance which shows he was not under a mistake on any of these occasions strengthens the presumption that he was not on the last, and this is amply borne out by authority." So in a later case cited in argument in the present case—Reg. v. Ollis, 49 W. R. 76, [1900] 2 K. B. 758—Wright, J., expounded the principle in similar terms, dwelling upon the importance of the element of nearness in point of time and circumstance in determining the relevancy, and therefore the admissibility, of the evidence as to the acts of the accused. "The evidence," said the learned judge, "tended to show that the conduct of the prisoner in tendering drafts on a bank at which he had no living account was not inadvertent or accidental, but was part of a systematic fraud extending over a period immediately preceding and following the date of the offence charged, and the case in this respect seems to me to be governed by Reg. v. Francis and Reg. v. Rhodes." Bruce, J., one of the dissenting judges in the same case of Reg. v. Ollis, lays down the law to the like effect with even greater strictness—[1900] 2 Q. B., at p. 774: "A line of cases has established the rule that when it becomes material to establish that an act charged in the indictment, and proved to have been done, was intentional and not accidental, evidence is admissible of similar acts done by the same person having no bearing upon or connection with the acts charged in the indictment save that the acts are similar and done by the same person. This rule is sometimes stated, I think accurately, to be a rule which admits indirect evidence of this class to prove guilty knowledge. The evidence is, I believe, admissible under the rule I have mentioned only on the ground that it tends to negative mistake or accident. It is quite true that in many cases to negative mistake or accident is to leave no other alternative but that the act was intentionally done with a criminal intent. But the ground on which this indirect evidence is admissible is that it tends to negative mistake or accident."

It is in strict accordance with the principles enunciated by the authorities that evidence of conduct of the prisoner on other occasions was admitted in cases of arson: R. v. Gray, 14 W. R. 671, 4 F. & F. 1102; of embezzlement: R. v. Richardson, (1860) 2 F. & F. 343; of false pretences: R. v. Francis, 22 W. R. 663, L. R 2 C. C. 128, and R. v. Rhodes, 47 W. R. 121, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; of coining: R. v. Fuller, (1816) R. & R. 30, and R. v. Weeks, 9 W. R. 553, 30 L. J. M. C. 141; of forgery: R. v. Whiley (1804) 2 Leach 983, and R. v. Colclough, (1882) 15 Cox C. C. 92; of obtaining credit by fraud: R. v. Wyatt, 52 W. R. 285, [1904] 1 K. B. 188.

In all these cases it was necessary to negative accident or mistake; in all of them the multiplication of similar acts having some connection in time and circumstance and nature to the act which was the subject-matter of the trial was admitted to proof as evidence showing systematic conduct of the prisoner at the time of the offence charged against him, and, therefore, negativing accident or mistake on his part in the last case. But it must be admitted that apart from judicial dicta which, although deserving of respect, cannot be treated with the weight which attaches to a decision, I believe that these principles which I have been indicating govern most of the cases cited for the prosecution. There is authority which, speaking for myself, I am not prepared to overrule, that when the question of criminal intent is material, then although in strictness perhaps the case is not one of disproving merely accident or mistake, evidence of prior occurrences subject to the conditions which I have just mentioned may become admissible against against the prisoner. I say this with special regard to the authority of Reg. v. Cooper, (1848) 3 Cox C. C. 547, a case which has never been dissented from and in which the point was fully argued before Cresswell, J. It was not cited to us in argument, and therefore I think it well to state the salient facts and the reasoning of the eminent judge who presided at the trial which renders the case peculiarly relevant to the matter now before us, because he takes the case of a charge of abortion as an illustration of the admissibility of a number of similar acts to negative innocence of intent. The prisoner was charged with accusing a person of an unnatural crime with intent to extort money, and in the course of the trial an argument arose as to the admissibility of a question whether one of the witnesses had seen the prisoner, who was a soldier, come off guard on former occasions with money in his possession, and as to what he said as to the means by which he had obtained that money, and Cresswell, J., said, at pp. 549-550 of that report: "The evidence is not offered by way of proving simply that the prisoner had been guilty of the same crime before. The question is, whether on this occasion he did an act with a design of effecting a certain object. One step in the proof is to show that he would be likely to know that a certain result would follow. . . . Suppose a charge against a man that he had attempted to procure abortion; the same medicine might be administered with that intention or without it. If it could be proved that he had often given that medicine before, and that he knew that abortion had always followed, surely that would be evidence against him."

In the present case, as it appears to me, there is not in strictness a question of accident or mistake. It was not disputed that the accused, a qualified surgeon, as I understand the facts, but not at the time in active practice, had used the surgical instruments upon Ethel Annie Jones. Did he use them for a lawful or for an unlawful purpose? That was the sole issue. In other words, had he or had he not in using them the mens rea? In my opinion if the evidence here had consisted solely of the single act alleged by the witness Gertrude Taylor to have been done to her nine months before, it ought not to have been admitted. Such a single isolated act is not just ground for any inference, and an act from which no inference can justly be drawn ought not to be allowed to be before the jury. If such evidence were admissible, then in all cases involving the issue of mens rea (and most serious crimes do involve it), as it seems to me, it would be permissible to show that on any previous occasion within any reasonable limit of time the prisoner had been guilty of similar misconduct, and in effect we should be doing that which would be unfair to the accused, and which Lord Campbell condemned as proving one crime in order to raise a presumption that another crime had been committed by the perpetrator of the first. Peculiarly dangerous and to my mind unfair to the accused would the admission of such a single act be in the present case. The evidence which directly implicates the accused is the evidence of a woman who was herself party to the alleged crime, one who was morally, if not in the strict legal sense, an accomplice of the accused person. She was an adult person who knew, according to her account, for what purpose the operation was to be performed, and consented to its performance. The evidence which was admitted, and in regard to which the question for this court has arisen, was the evidence of a witness who, if her evidence was true, also was a consenting party to the illegal operation which the prisoner performed upon her, and so far an accomplice in his criminal conduct. It is needless to dwell upon the danger to innocence of evidence of this description. But the evidence given by Taylor was not confined to evidence of this single act. It included a statement by the prisoner to Taylor which might fairly be interpreted to mean that he had successfully performed a similar operation upon dozens of girls with similar instruments. In other words, that he had often used the same instruments before and had always found that abortion followed. Upon the reasoning of Cresswell, J., in Reg. v. Cooper, and upon the authority of that judgment it appears to me that such evidence is admissible, and that the ruling of Charles, J., in Reg. v. Dale, in which it was proposed to prove repeated acts of the same nature over a period including the period of crime, as well as the ruling of my brother A. T. Lawrence in this case, may be upheld.

RIDLEY, J.—I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment which has been delivered by my lord, and, as I thoroughly agree with both its reasoning and its result, I think it is unnecessary to give a judgment of my own.

DARLING, J., read the following judgment, in which, after stating the facts, he said: The direct effect of Taylor's evidence is to prove that the defendant had been guilty of another crime than that charged in the indictment but similar in character. Now it is not to rejected on that ground. I have tried to ascertain the principle which must be relied upon as justifying its acceptance or rejection, and I find it in Foster's Crown Law, Discourse I., p. 246, where it is said: "The rule of rejecting all manner of evidence in criminal prosecutions that is foreign to the point in issue is founded on sound sense and common justice. For no man is bound at the peril of life or liberty, fortune or reputation, to answer at once and unprepared for every action of his life." The same rule is thus expressed by Lord Campbell in Oddy's case: "The law of England does not allow one crime to be proved in order to raise a probability that another crime has been committed by the perpetrator of the first." That he was speaking of a crime, evidence as to which would have been altogether "foreign to the point in issue"—to use Foster's phrase—appears, I think, by this observation of his lordship made in the course of counsel's argument: "In the French courts the case against an accused person is often commenced by evidence that he had previously committed offences of the same sort as that which forms the subject of inquiry. But it is not the practice of our law." Now the reason for the practice in the French courts of admitting evidence of many matters which we should certainly describe as "foreign to the point at issue" is that the Code d'Instruction Criminelle (Liv. 2, Tit. 9, s. 241) provides: "L'acte d'accusation exposera 1° la nature du délit qui forme la base de l'accusation: 2° le fait et toutes les circonstances qui peuvent aggraver ou diminuer la peine." By this means various matters are in France laid before the jury which have no connection with the crime charged, but are such, as in England, are brought to the knowledge of the judge alone (perhaps by means of the calendar) or are proved after verdict. The jury in France then find the fact with extenuating or aggravating circumstances for the purpose of affecting the sentence, which is heavier on an habitual evil liver.

I should greatly regret a close assimilation of our criminal procedure to that of France, but I think it well to note that the French rules as to evidence necessarily differ from ours by reason of the wide difference between the functions of judges and juries under French and English law. Indeed, it can hardly be said that in our sense the French courts are bound by rules of evidence at all. Yet subject to observance of the rule as laid down by Foster our law does undoubtedly allow evidence of another crime in order to negative some possible defence, such as accident or mistake, or to show a systematic course of conduct or guilty knowledge where that is material For each of these propositions there is ample authority in Reg. v. Geering, Reg. v. Rhodes, Reg. v. Weeks, Reg. v. Francis, and Reg v. Wyatt.

Still, it has been argued that such evidence may not be admitted to prove intent. It cannot be said that no evidence is admissible to prove intent, for declarations of a defendant's intention and unequivocal acts of his are every day given in evidence with that object. Moreover, accident is negatived merely in order to prove design which involves intent. System is proved for the same reason, and proof of scienter is merely a step towards that end. I do not quote a number of cases which have been decided on this point, because very many of them were reviewed in the case of Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, and the Lord Chancellor there said: "It cannot be denied that the decisions have not always been completely in accord." In the same case, however, he thus laid down the law in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council: "It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to shew that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused person is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to shew the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused." I do not suppose that Lord Herschell meant that such evidence might be called to rebut any defence possibly open, but of an intention to rely on which there was no probability whatever. Here, however, the evidence objected to was called to overthrow a defence already set up and admitted to be the defendant's answer to the charge. It appears that the defence adopted by the defendant in this case was that he was performing a lawful operation in using instruments adapted to procure abortion. Where ignorance is the defence relied on, the cases I have cited shew that evidence is admissible to prove knowledge—where accident is suggested as a defence, evidence is equally admissible to disprove ignorance by showing design—and it follows that such evidence may go to prove further what particular design actuated the perpetrator of the act. Such evidence assuredly cannot be inadmissible merely because it is more cogent is so far as it shows not only the existence of some design, but also precisely what that design was. Here the defence suggested was that the act charged was done designedly, but that the design was lawful, and the reason of its being so is indicated. Then this evidence is tendered by the prosecution to the effect that, on another woman pregnant by him, the defendant had performed a similar act or operation with like instruments, and had then stated in effect that his design on that occasion was unlawful—viz., to procure abortion. In my opinion this evidence of Taylor is not irrelevant or foreign to the point in issue—that issue being, not what he did do, but with what object did he do it. That issue involves the state of his knowledge or belief as to the effect of such an operation. Taylor's evidence went to prove that, contrary to the defendant's allegation in defence as to his being engaged in doing a lawful act, he was doing a thing which, in his view, was apt to procure abortion, and that because it was so he had already done it with that unlawful avowed knowledge and purpose. This evidence, therefore, tends to prove that the defendant had in repeating his former conduct an intention different from that alleged by him in his defence, so it is not foreign to the point of it nor less relevant because it goes to prove the charge in the indictment. I have not affected to judge whether the case of Reg. v. Dale was rightly decided; for I do not think it necessary to rely upon that decision of Charles, J., in order to uphold this conviction. But even were that ruling wrong, I think this conviction can still be sustained. Nor does it appear to me advisable to strive for increase in the technicality of our rules of evidence so as to narrow yet more the approaches to the source of justice. Our law already, and for good reason, undoubtedly excludes evidence of many matters which anyone in his own daily affairs of moment would regard as important in coming to a decision. The observations of Lord Campbell show that much would be excluded at a trial merely because the defendant would in the then state of the law have found it hard to bring evidence in contradiction.

Now when the application of this doctrine is contended for, it seems to me important to bear in mind that a defendant on a criminal charge might not in Lord Campbell's day give evidence, nor could his wife. These disabilities no longer exist, and, provided he have due notice, an accused person may fairly be confronted with evidence relevant to the issue now that he may give his own testimony, although it would have been hard to admit it when the witness-box was forbidden to him. I believe that to quash this conviction would necessitate the interpretation of our rules of evidence so in favour of the accused as to exclude such proof of guilty knowledge as hitherto has been admissible, and might perhaps give occasion for the repetition of the bitter saying, "Il s'en faut bien que l'innocence trouve autant de protection que la crime."

Since writing my judgment I have had the advantage of reading my brother Bray's judgment, and I agree that the conviction can also be sustained for the reasons he gives to that effect.

The following judgment (written by JELF, J.) was read by BRAY, J.: "I am of opinion that the evidence was admissible, and that the conviction ought to stand. It is no doubt contrary to the law of this country (as it is repugnant to the British sense of justice) to admit against a prisoner who is on his trial for one offence evidence that he has on another occasion committed another, or even a similar offence, merely with the object of showing that he is on that account a person more likely to have committed the offence with which he is charged, except (and the exception is significant) that, if a prisoner endeavour to establish a good character as making it improbable that he should have committed the crime charged against him, the prosecution may rebut this inference by proving even a previous conviction: see as to this exception the cases collected in Archbold's Criminal Pleadings (23rd ed.), p. 313. But it often happens, both in civil and criminal cases, that evidence is tendered on several alternative grounds, and yet it is never objected that if on any ground it is admissible, that ground must not prevail, because on some other ground it would be inadmissible and prejudicial. In such cases it is usual for the judge (not always very successfully) to caution the jury against being biassed by treating the evidence in the objectionable sense. Now in regard to the class of evidence with which we have to deal, I think we all agree that the touchstone by which the evidence in question in the present case is to be deemed admissible or not is most carefully defined in the judgment of Lord Herschell in Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, expressly approved and adopted ten years later by the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved in Rex v. Wyatt. Those cases crystallize the doctrine laid down in the long series of decisions which have been cited to us—namely, that (apart from legislative enactments which deal with certain special cases) the common law test of admissibility is that "the evidence adduced is relevant to an issue before the jury," it being added that "it may be so revelant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would be otherwise open to the accused." The judgment in Rex v. Wyatt applies to that case the description of evidence spoken of by Lord Herschell in these words: "The evidence objected to was clearly admissible as tending to establish a systematic course of conduct on the part of the accused and as negativing any accident or mistake or the existence of any reasonable or honest motive." These last words are equivalent to and confirm Lord Herschell's expression "to rebut a defence which would be otherwise open to the accused." Now in the present case the use of the instruments upon Ethel Jones was admitted, but it was suggested on the prisoner's behalf that the use was for a lawful purpose, and not with any criminal design. In effect the prisoner set up the defence, "In using the instruments I had no design to procure a miscarriage; if the thing which I did procured or tended to procure a miscarriage" (a fact which I do not understand to have been denied) "that came about accidentally, and not designedly." This surely was "a defence open to the accused" which the prosecution might rebut—a defence, at all events, clearly ejusdem generis with the particular defences mentioned by Lord Herschell. It asserted "the existence of a reasonable or honest motive" which the prosecution might "negative." And upon the question whether there was or was not a design on the prisoner's part to procure the miscarriage of Ethel Jones evidence that on any other occasion he had done the same thing with similar instruments under similar circumstances with that design upon another girl seems to me to have a distinct bearing. The fact that only one other case was brought forward, and that case nine months old, goes, in my mind, only to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of the evidence. The subject of inquiry is the state of mind of the prisoner when he used the instruments upon Ethel Jones, and the improbability that on one occasion under precisely similar circumstances he should have the design to procure a miscarriage, and on the other occasion should have another and innocent object, would tend to show (and that is all that is necessary) that he had the bad design in regard to Ethel Jones. Of course, if instances are multiplied, the weight of the evidence is greatly increased, and if a system is shown may be irresistible. But to my mind it is quite unnecessary to show a system, which is only a question of degree. If it were necessary to go beyond the two instances, this can generally only be done by proving a series of instances, and if the opposite view prevails it would be impossible to prove such series, as the first instance (besides the one charged) would be shut out in limine, or else the court would have to decide according to the statement of counsel as to what he expected to be able to prove, and after they have admitted evidence of the first instance the rest might break down. In short, I cannot think that the admissibility of the evidence can depend upon the accuracy or astuteness of counsel's opening statement. If he tenders the evidence mainly on the right ground the ultimate bearing of it must depend upon what it turns out to be. For instance, if it wholly fails to come up to the proof suggested, it ought to be expunged, and in some cases, owing to the prejudice created by its inadvertent admission, the jury might have to be discharged and the case tried before a fresh jury. If the proof of the evidence afterwards given by Gertrude Taylor had been handed up to the judge he would, I think, have been bound to admit it. And this leads me to a final point, on which, if necessary, this case might be rested. While to my mind it is not necessary to prove a system, yet the evidence of Gertrude Taylor does abundantly prove a system on the part of the prisoner to procure miscarriage on girls in the way described. For when she said she was in the family way he said he would "put her all right," and proceeded to use these instruments, saying also on the same subject that "he had put dozens of girls right." If this does not establish against the prisoner out of his own mouth that he was systematically guilty of the crime which he was charged with committing against Ethel Jones, I fail to see what evidence would suffice. For all these reasons I think the evidence was quite rightly admitted by my brother A. T. Lawrence, and that the conviction should be affirmed.

BRAY, J.—I will now read my own judgment. It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts, as they have been already fully stated, and I come at once to the question whether the evidence of Gertrude Taylor was admissible. A careful examination of the cases where evidence of this kind has been admitted shows that they may be grouped under three heads: (1) Where the prosecution seeks to prove a system or course of conduct. (2) Where the prosecution seeks to rebut a suggestion on the part of the prisoner of accident or mistake. (3) Where the prosecution seeks to prove knowledge by the prisoner of some fact. The case of Blake v. Albion Life Assurance, 27 W. R. 321, (1879) 4 C. P. D. 94—a civil case—will illustrate the first class. Lord Lindley says at p. 106: "Nothing would seem, at first sight, more plain and straightforward, and there would be no appearance of fraud; but then the plaintiff proposed to adduce evidence to show that the transaction was one of a fraudulent class. Was he, or was he not, to be precluded from doing it? . . . The answer to the objection that evidence of frauds on other persons cannot be admitted, is that this transaction is one of a class, that there are features in common, the features in common being the false pretence and a knowledge of that false pretence on the part of the defendant company, and the moment that is shown the plaintiff's case is established." The word system implies a connection between the acts of which evidence is sought to be given and the act with which the prisoner is charged. A number of acts of theft do not as a rule consititute a system. They are isolated acts having no connection with one another. On the other hand, the transactions of a long firm are the result of a formulated scheme and part of a system. The ground on which in cases of this class evidence is admitted of acts not charged in the indictment is, in my opinion, that the case which the prosecution seeks to prove is that prisoner has in his mind a scheme or plan (say) for obtaining money by fraud, that the act with which the prisoner is charged is part of a planned fraud, and that the other acts of which evidence is sought to be given, when proved, will show the existence of the plan, and, therefore, the guilty mind of the prisoner. Other cases of this class are Reg v. Rhodes and Reg. v. Ollis (where see the judgment of Wright, J.). Reg. v. Oddy, on the other hand, shows that where there was no system and no connection between the acts the evidence is not admissible: see also Reg. v. Holt, (1860) 1 Bell C. C. 280. Of the second class Reg. v. Geering is a good example. In order to show that the prisoner administered the poison for the purpose of killing her husband the prosecution required to negative accident or mistake. For this purpose evidence was admitted of the death of two of the prisoner's sons from the same poison about the same time and while they were living with the prisoner and had eaten food prepared by her. The principle on which this evidence was admitted is not expressly stated further than by saying that it was admissible to disprove accident or mistake, but it obviously is this: If there had been but one case charged in the indictment it was possible, though not probable, that the arsenic might have got into the food by accident or mistake, but when two other cases are proved where death happened on previous occasions to two other inmates under similar circumstances, accident or mistake becomes so improbable as to be almost impossible. The proof of each additional case increases the improbability of accident or mistake, and therefore tends to disprove it. It was necessary, of course, to show that the other deaths happened under similar circumstances, but it was not necessary to prove a system or that the prisoner had conceived a plan to poison all her family. One other death under similar circumstances would tend to show the improbability of accident or mistake, and would on that ground be admissible. There are several other cases decided on the same principle, such as Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, Reg. v. Dorsett, 2 C. & K. 306, Reg. v. Gray, and Reg. v. Francis, and the cases of uttering counterfeit coin will come under the third class, and to some extent also fall within the other two classes. It was necessary for the prosecution to show that the prisoner knew that the articles of jewellery which he was pawning, or endeavouring to pawn, were false, and that the coin he was uttering was counterfeit; and one other act beyond the acts charged in the indictment might tend to prove knowledge, and would therefore be admissible. It remains to be considered whether the evidence of Gertrude Taylor comes within any of these three classes. I will take the third class first. The prosecution no doubt had to prove that the prisoner knew that these instruments which he used were capable of being used for the purpose of procuring abortion, and the evidence of Gertrude Taylor went to prove such knowledge on the part of the prisoner; but the case does not show that the knowledge of the prisoner was here really in dispute, and if the prosecution had claimed at the trial that the evidence should be admitted on these grounds, I think the prisoner's counsel would have stated that it was no part of his defence that the prisoner did not know, and that his case was that the prisoner was a doctor, and, therefore, of course, knew that such instruments might be used to procure abortion as well as for lawful and proper purposes, and that the whole question was whether they were in fact used for an unlawful purpose. In that event I think the evidence would not have been admissible. The prosecution could not under such circumstances as those say that the evidence was required to prove knowledge; it would be obvious that it was wanted for some other purpose. I think, bearing in mind the strong prejudice that would necessarily be created in the minds of the jury by evidence of this class, which shows that the prisoner has been guilty on another occasion of a similar offence, the greatest care ought to be taken to reject such evidence, unless it is plainly necessary to prove something which is really in issue. It is true that in Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales Lord Herschell says, at p. 65, "or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused"; but I do not think his mind was directed to such a case as I have assumed, and indeed it could hardly be said that such a defence would be open after such a statement from the prisoner's counsel. In my opinion, if the prosecution sought to justify the admission of the evidence of Gertrude Taylor solely on this ground, we ought to hold that it was not admissible. I come now to the second class. In my opinion it cannot be said that this evidence went to negative accident or mistake in the case charged in the indictment. The prisoner's case was that he used these instruments for a lawful purpose and not by accident or mistake. It was said, however, that, according to the prisoner's case, miscarriage followed accidentally the use of these instruments, and that is true; but in Taylor's case miscarriage did not follow the use of these instruments, and her evidence did not tend to show that such instruments might not have been lawfully used. It merely showed that in her case they were used with an unlawful intention, but without any result. I see nothing inconsistent in a doctor one day using these instruments for an unlawful purpose and in another case many months afterwards using them for a lawful purpose, unless you can show a course of conduct, and not merely one or two isolated cases. It follows, from what I have stated, that if the evidence of Taylor was admissible it must be because it falls under the first class. It is here that, in my opinion, the principal difficulty arises. I have no doubt that, according to the principles laid down in cases in this class, it would be permissible to call evidence to show that the prisoner carried on the business of an abortionist, but I think it would also be permissible to show something perhaps a little short of this—viz., that he was in the habit of treating women in a state of pregnancy with a view to procure abortion. I think this would be a system or course of conduct within the cases. But I do not think that the proof of but one similar case, without any special connection with the case charged in the indictment, would prove, or indeed would be evidence of, such a system. Of course it may be said that if two cases will not do, how many will? But this is a difficulty which always arises in such cases. To prove that a man was twice drunk and nothing more will not prove that he is an habitual drunkard. I think, when evidence of this class is tendered, the judge should require an assurance from the counsel for the prosecution that in his opinion he has evidence of a sufficient number of cases to prove a system. In criminal trials no real difficulty can arise, because the judge has before him the depositions of the witnesses called before the magistrates and the proofs of any additional witnesses proposed to be called. He can therefore see for himself whether the evidence is sufficient; and before admitting evidence of this kind the judge should satisfy himself that the evidence tendered will, if true, establish, or tend to establish, what I have called a system. If, therefore, all that Taylor proved was that the prisoner had attempted to procure abortion in her case, such evidence should not, for the reason stated, have been admitted. In my opinion, however, Taylor's evidence, when looked at, went, if true, to prove much more. Mr. Thomas called our attention to her statement that the prisoner had told her "that he had put dozens of girls right," and to other statements that she said he had made, viz., "that he was a doctor and would put me all right," and "that it"—referring to the instrument—"would fetch it away." In my opinion Taylor's evidence, when looked at as a whole, is evidence of a system on the part of the prisoner. It may be said that such evidence as this from a girl of bad reputation may be untrue and nearly worthless, and so it may be in some cases, though not here, but it is evidence which must be weighed by the jury. When once it is seen that a part of her evidence tends to shew a system, the whole evidence becomes admissible. When evidence has been given of a system it becomes permissible then to prove any case which forms part of the system, and the operations which the prisoner attempted on her tended to corroborate the evidence she gave as to the statements he made to her. Therefore the whole of Taylor's evidence was admissible. But it is said that it was not tendered on this particular ground, and Mr. Thomas very fairly admitted that he did not expressly put forward this argument. This admission of Mr. Thomas, however, forms no good ground for quashing the conviction if we can see that no ground for its rejection could have been successfully put forward by the counsel for the prisoner. The case states—and, in my opinion, rightly states—that if the evidence was admissible the conviction is to stand. Further, it does not state, and, in my opinion, also rightly, any particular ground as the ground on which the evidence was either tendered or admitted. The standing or quashing of the conviction ought not to depend on whether the counsel for the prosecution put forward the right or the wrong ground. If there was a right ground on which this evidence could be admitted, no injustice has been done to the prisoner by admitting it, and to allow the prisoner to escape owing to a possible mistake—and I do not admit that there was a mistake—on the part of the prosecuting counsel would be to allow him to escape on the merest technicality, and would work great injustice. My answer, therefore, to the question asked in the case—viz., whether this evidence was admissible, must be in the affirmative, and that the conviction should stand. Since writing this judgment my attention has been called by my brother Kennedy to the case of Reg. v. Cooper, which, though not precisely in point, I think strongly confirms the opinion I have given. Cresswell, J., sums up the position when he says: "His whole conduct is to be interpreted with reference to the charge made against him, and I think what was said by him under similar circumstances to the present is admissible."

The judgment of A. T. LAWRENCE, J., was read by DARLING, J., as follows: I am of opinion that the evidence of the girl Taylor was admissible, and that the conviction should be affirmed. The general rule is stated by Lord Herschell in these terms: "It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused." The relevance depends upon the issues actually in contest; whenever it is in issue whether the prisoner, though he did the act alleged, did it without any intention—i.e., accidentally, or without any criminal intention—i.e., innocently, such evidence may be given.

By showing that the prisoner did an act of the same character under similar circumstances on other occasions accident becomes improbable. That the same accident should repeatedly occur to the same person is unusual, especially so when it confers a benefit on him.

The degree of improbability will depend upon the number of times it is shown to have occurred and the similarity of the circumstances on each occasion. If the act charged is manifestly an intentional act, but the defence is that it was honestly or properly done, such evidence is admissible to rebut this defence by showing knowledge of some fact essential to guilty knowledge or by showing that in other cases similar acts have been committed by the prisoner by the like means under the like circumstances.

The number and the peculiarity of the circumstances tend to show the improbability of the innocent intention.

It is for this reason that in cases of fraud, where it is necessary to show a fraudulent intent in the prisoner, that other acts of the like character are briefly described as a system. There is no special rule of the law of evidence applicable to accident or to system. These are merely convenient phrases indicative of cases in which evidence of this character is admissible. A system is not necessarily criminal—most men carry on business on a system; they may even be said to live on a system. Where, however, acts are of a character that, taken alone, may be innocent, but which result in benefit or reward to the actor and loss or suffering to the patient, repeated instances of such acts at least show that experience has fully informed the actor of all their elements and details, and it is only reasonable to infer that the act is designed and intentional, and its motive the benefit or reward to himself or the loss or suffering to some third person.

The mind of the prisoner can only be revealed by his words or by his acts. It is in many cases impossible to form a sound conclusion upon the state of his mind at a given moment, unless his words and acts under similar circumstances are subjected to investigation. It is for this reason that I think the words of Lord Herschell—"to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused"—are an essential part of the proposition of the law.

This idea is also expressed by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., in Rex v. Wyatt when he says that such such evidence is admissible "as negativing any accident or mistake or the existence of any reasonable or honest motive."

Any statement of the law which omits this latter part of the proposition would seriously cramp the administration of justice, and cannot be supported upon principle.

Roscoe in his Digest of Evidence in Criminal Cases (12th ed.), p. 80, says: "There are cases in which much greater latitude is permitted, and evidence is allowed to be given of the prisoner's conduct on other occasions, where it has no other connection with the charge under inquiry than that it tends to throw light on what were his motives and intention in doing the act complained of."

The authorities, in my opinion, support this view.

In Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society it was necessary to show that the defendant company knew of the fraud of Howard at the time they received the plaintiff's money. The acts of the company towards the plaintiff were all, taken alone, ordinary business transactions; in order to show knowledge of the fraud it was necessary to show that they had had other transactions of a similar character with other persons, and that "Howard" was sometimes "Gard," and sometimes "Rogers" and other assumed names, but that on each occasion the premium went to the company and no loan to the assured. In Reg. v. Francis guilty knowledge that a certain ring was falsely described as a diamond ring was shown by evidence of a previous dealing with a chain and several attempts to deal with other rings within a short space of time. Here the connection between the several acts lay in the nature of the goods, trinkets or jewellery, and the class of persons defrauded or attempted to be defrauded—viz., pawnbrokers. This rendered a plan or scheme of fraud probable.

In Reg. v. Rhodes evidence of two instances of obtaining eggs by the false pretence of an advertisement was admitted, although these eggs were obtained subsequently to the acts charged in the indictment. The business to which this advertisement related was said by the prosecution to be a sham or bogus business, and these two instances were held to throw a light back upon the prisoner's state of mind when he obtained the eggs for which he was indicted, the nexus or connection being the same advertisement of the same business.

In Reg. v. Ollis the prisoner was charged with obtaining money by false pretences on three cheques on the 24th of June, the 26th of June, and the 6th of July. At the trial evidence was admitted relating to a cheque which the prisoner was alleged to have obtained fraudulently by giving another valueless cheque dated the 5th of July for it. The prisoner had already been tried and acquitted of this fraud. It was held to be rightly admitted as evidence of guilty knowledge. Bruce, J., differed because he considered the important question was the prisoner's knowledge of the state of his banking account, and it was not shown that the cheque of the 5th of July had been returned dishonoured before the 6th of July, when he gave the last of the cheques mentioned in the indictment.

Inasmuch as the prisoner had been adjudicated a bankrupt in the previous May, and the account at the bank upon which all the cheques were drawn showed a credit balance of only 3s. 6d., and nothing had been paid into or drawn out of it for three years, the majority of the court thought the evidence admissible, Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., saying that the criticism of Bruce, J., went rather to the weight of the evidence than to its admissibility.

In Reg. v. Wyatt the prisoner was charged with obtaining credit (for lodgings and food) by fraud. Evidence was admitted of his having obtained lodgings, &c., at several other places and having left without paying for them.

Evidence of the same character has been admitted for many years in coining cases, in uttered forged documents, in embezzlement, and in murder.

The cases relied upon as opposed to this view are not so when looked into.

In Reg. v. Oddy the charge was one of larceny and receiving of cloth; evidence was tendered that other cloth which had been stolen was found in the house of the accused. This evidence was rejected as not being admissible to show guilty knowledge when receiving the cloth covered by the indictment.

There was here no connection between the charge and the fact tendered in evidence except that both related to cloth. Each was found shortly after it was stolen, and several months had elapsed between the two larcenies. Recent possession of stolen goods is evidence of the larceny of the goods in question. It would be illogical to hold that the same fact, viz., recent possession, can be evidence of two crimes so widely different in the detail of their circumstances as theft and receiving knowing the thing to be stolen.

In Reg. v. Holt evidence of facts alleged to constitute a similar pretence to that charged was rejected.

It was inadmissible, for the pretence charged was that the prisoner had pretended that he had authority to receive money on behalf of his principal when he had not; the only defence raised was that in fact he had such authority. It was not relevant to that issue to show that he had received other money on the same statement. It tended to support the defence quite as much as the prosecution: see Blackburn, J., in Reg. v. Francis.

In Reg. v. Dale as reported, the admissibility of evidence of this class would seem to have been carried too far.

The report lends colour to the view that this evidence was admissible when the only issue raised was as to the fact of the prisoner's having used the instrument.

In such a case such evidence would not be admissible. It is to be observed, however, that the only ruling of the learned judge was one given during the opening statement of counsel for the prosecution. The evidence never was in fact admitted, for the prisoner pleaded guilty before any evidence was tendered.

In all cases in order to make evidence of this class admissible there must be some connection between the facts of the crime charged in the indictment and the facts proved in evidence. In proximity of time, in method, or in circumstance there must be a nexus between the two sets of facts, otherwise no inference can be safely deduced therefrom.

In the present case the prosecutrix Ethel Jones was an inmate of the prisoner's house. He had induced her to have sexual connection with him by promising to "keep her right." When she feared she was in trouble he said he would do so, and he used instruments upon her which he said would "bring it away." When arrested he stated that he had used the instruments for a lawful purpose, and that when she became very ill in consequence he administered drugs to allay the pain.

In support of this defence it was suggested that he used the instruments when examining her for leuchorrhœa, and that the subsequent illness was neither foreseen nor intended by him. The evidence of Taylor was tendered to rebut this defence.

It was shown that she too was an inmate of his house, that he had induced her to have sexual connection with him, that when her periods should have arrived and before she left for home he used the same instruments in the same way, saying he would "put her right, as he had put dozens of other girls before." If evidence of system were needed, this was such evidence. So also was the evidence as to a statement made by Nellie Cornes, a servant of the prisoner who was present at the operation, which statement was to the effect that the prisoner had "put her all right." The operation was unsuccessful in the case of Taylor; but that was due not to the nature of the operation, but to the stage of the pregnancy then reached, for the defendant told the witness that if she did not get right not to go more than six weeks and then he would operate again. In due time a child was born, for the maintenance of which the prisoner consented to an affiliation order. It is impossible, without reversing a long series of cases, to say that the evidence of Taylor was not admissible.

It showed that the illness of the prosecutrix was the result of design and not of accident; it showed that the prisoner's scheme or system when the indulgence of his passions had got girls into trouble was to use these instruments upon them to relieve himself from the burden of paternity.

It tended to rebut the defence he set up of an innocent operation, and to negative any reasonable or honest motive for its performance.

Conviction affirmed.

GARBUTT v. STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE, &c., OF DURHAM. (a.)

Police — Pension — "Approved service" — Continuous service—Diligent and faithful service—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), ss. 1, 4, sub-section 12.

By section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, "every constable in a police force if he has completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service . . . shall . . . be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life." By section 4, sub-section 1, "approved service" means "such . . . as may be certified by the police authority to have been diligent and faithful service"; and by sub-section 2 a certificate of the chief officer of the police force, as to the period of a constable's approved service, is to be sufficient evidence thereof.

Held, that the twenty-five years of service entitling to a pension might be made up of two or more distinct periods, that the chief officer's certificate was conclusive as to the duration of that service, but that the police authority had to certify as to the character and nature of the service, and might produce evidence to support their contentions.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 678, [1904] 2 K. B. 514) reversed.

Appeal in formâ pauperis from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting) (52 W. R. 678, [1904] 2 K. B. 514), affirming that of the King's Bench Division, upon a case stated by quarter sessions.

The case is set out in the report in the Divisional Court (52 W. R. 527, [1904] 1 K. B. 522), and the facts are shortly given in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

The courts below had held that the approved service of a constable to entitle him to pension must be a continuous and not broken service.

A very full argument is given in the report below.

Pickersgill and R. I. Simey, for the appellant.

Shearman, K.C., and Meynell, for the respondents.

Lord LOREBURN, L.C.—In this appeal it appears that Mr. Garbutt, the appellant, served as a constable for twenty-five years and upwards in the county of Durham police force. There were two interruptions of his service. On one occasion he resigned for a few months, and upon another occasion he was asked to resign and did so, also for a few months; but on both occasions he was reinstated. At the end of his service he claimed a pension under the Police Act of 1890, but the police authority, that is, the standing joint committee, who are now the respondents, refused his claim. He then appealed to the court of quarter sessions under section 11 of the Act. At the quarter sessions the police authority advanced two contentions. The first was that service to entitle men to a pension under the Act must be continuous service, and it was so held in the Court of King's Bench and in the Court of Appeal, with, it must be added, the express dissent of one of the learned judges and very grave doubts expressed by others of the learned judges. It is indisputable that this Act is so unfortunately drawn that there is room for a good deal of doubt and ambiguity with regard to its true meaning, but in my opinion the Act does not require the service to be continuous. It does not say so, and if you speak of twenty-five years' service, it seems to me that this means primâ facie that the man has served for twenty-five years, and none the less so because he happens to have allowed an interval to elapse, or more intervals than one, throughout the period of that service. It appears to me that only one section—namely, section 4, sub-section 5, can be said to be inconsistent with this view. That particular sub-section does seem to have been drawn either in the thought or in the apprehension that the service required must be continuous service. But I think it is a superfluous section inserted ex abundanti cautelâ, and that the natural significance of the language used at the commencement of the Act ought not to be affected by the presence of a clause like that. With regard to the second contention urged by the respondents at quarter sessions, a much more serious point was raised. The police authority claimed a right on that appeal to give evidence in order to show that the service had not been "diligent and faithful service" within the meaning of the Act. They had given no certificate under section 4, sub-section 1, of the Act. On the appeal, which was really and in substance an appeal against them for refusing to give and act upon a certificate, they proposed to give proof in support of their contention that the service had not been "diligent and faithful," but that evidence was rejected on the ground, as I understand it, that the certificate which had in fact been given was conclusive. It was a certificate under sub-section 2 of section 4, which has to be signed by the chief officer as distinguished from the police authority. In the first place, in my opinion, the certificate of the chief officer was not conclusive. It was sufficient evidence—that is to say, the court might act upon it if they thought fit. In the second place, I think that that certificate had no bearing upon the point of "diligent and faithful service," and was only evidence of the period of approved service, and not of the fact whether it had been in the true sense of the word approved or not. If it were otherwise the chief officer would, as it seems to me, in these matters completely supersede the police authority. This second point was not decided in either of the courts below because upon the view which they took upon the first point it became immaterial. It is necessary for us to decide it now. The answer which I propose to give to the two questions put in the case stated is this: The first is, "whether we" (that is, the court of quarter sessions) "were right in dismissing the application on the grounds stated"—that is, that the service must be continuous—I think that they were wrong. The second question is "whether we" (that is, the court of quarter sessions) "were right in rejecting the evidence tendered on behalf of the respondents." I think also in that case that they were wrong. This case must therefore now, after the litigation which has already taken place, go down to be re-heard by the court of quarter sessions. I can only express my deep regret that a case involving matter of great moment to a poor man should in consequence of the difficult language used in an Act of Parliament have put him to so much anxiety and to so much expense.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I agree with my noble and learned friend on both points.

Lord DAVEY.—On the first point mentioned by my noble and learned friend I confess that the inclination of my mind—I cannot say it is more than that—is rather in favour of the view taken by the Court of Appeal and by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J. My doubts, however, are not sufficiently strong to lead me to dissent from the motion which has been made upon that ground. With regard to the second point I entirely agree with what the Lord Chancellor has said, and I should not add anything if it were not for what seems to me to be the entirely fallacious argument which has been used in support of the opposite view. If I understand the argument rightly, the effect of the second sub-section of section 4 is said to be that "a certificate signed by the chief officer of a police force" is "sufficient evidence" both of the constable's service being "approved service" and also of the period of it. In my opinion that is not the construction of the language, and in my opinion, according to the English language, that cannot be taken to be the meaning without violence to the words. It seems to me to be based upon an entire mistake as to the first and second sub-sections of the Act. The first sub-section says that the expression "approved service" is to be defined, and it defines it in this way: "'Approved service' shall for the purposes of this Act means such service as may after such deductions as aforesaid (if any) be certified under the order of the police authority to have been diligent and faithful service." Therefore you must first have a certificate under the order of the police authority, which the certificate contained in the appendix before us is not. You must have a certificate under the order of the police authority of diligent and faithful service. Then in order to ascertain what the period of that service is, you must look at the other sub-sections of the section, sub-sections 2 and 3. Taking sub-section 3 first, you find that certain deductions may be made from the period which counts for approved service for "sickness, misconduct, or neglect of duty." As regards those the chief constable is made the arbiter. The chief constable is therefore the proper person to certify what is the length of the period which you are to count as approved service. Therefore he is the proper person to sign the certificate to that effect under sub-section 2. I cannot read sub-section 2 as Mr. Pickersgill does, as meaning the same certificate as is to be made under sub-section 1. If I understand his reading of the two sub-sections it is this—true it is that the approved service requires to be certified under the order of the police authority, but by sub-section 2 a certificate signed by the chief constable is "sufficient evidence that that authority has been given." I cannot read it in that sense. I think that sub-sections 1, 2, and 3 form a consistent whole showing what evidence is required—first, that it is approved service, and secondly, what the period which will count for approved service is to be.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—As this case is apparently to be remitted to the court of quarter sessions I think it well that those who have to hear the case should be clear as to what the judgment of your lordships is. The Lord Chancellor and Lord Macnaghten have already expressed the view that the service need not be continuous in order to entitle the appellant to his pension. In those opinions I entirely concur. The section on which we have the claim made for this pension says that "if the constable has completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service" and is of the prescribed age he shall, after due notice of his desire to retire, "be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life." Those words are absolute and distinct, and I cannot understand how it could be supposed that if it was the intention of the Legislature that that service should be continuous, the word "continuous" should not have been inserted in that section. I have listened to the able arguments which have been put before your lordships as to the effect of certain other sections in the Act, but I am bound to say that the words of Lord Selborne in Hough v. Windus, 32 W.R. 452, 12 Q. B. D., at p. 224, appear to me to be the correct and governing authority. Those sections were probably, or possibly, not put in when the Act was framed, but have come into the Act in this way. Those who have been in either House of Parliament know full well what occurs when a Bill is in committee. Someone wishes a particular point to be made quite clear, and he asks that a certain section or certain words shall be inserted. Then it is said, "We do not need it because the general words cover it." The answer is, If the general words cover it why should not we have the section to make it clear?" The Minister in charge of the Bill, following expediency, says, rather than continue the discussion, "You shall have the clause"; and then that clause is produced afterwards before those who have to deal with the matter judicially as a proof that the first clause is to be done away with, or that its principle is to be done away with. I admit that the judges are placed in a very unfortunate position, but before the express words of a statute can be altered and changed so as to have a different meaning, that alteration and change ought to be clearly expressed. Therefore in this case I follow the words of the section which speaks of this certificate, in sub-section 1, and I say that no continuous service is necessary. The second point is one on which I am compelled, with very great regret, to arrive at the same conclusion as my noble and learned friends. I do not quite appreciate the argument that was addressed to us as to the meaning of the words, when it was said that a general order might be supposed to exist. I had not quite in my mind at the time of the argument that the effect of section 4 is that the first certificate which is mentioned there shall be under the order of the police authority. Therefore the proposition that was put before us in argument was that an order to the chief constable may be presumed to exist. I wish that I could give effect to it, but I do not think that is a sound argument, for this reason: it is a question of fact whether the order was given or not. If the statute requires the order to be given, and that thereupon the chief constable should give his certificate as to the period which has been found to be approved service, that order must be in existence as a matter of fact, and could easily have been produced before the court if it had been in existence. If that evidence has not been given I think it absolutely necessary, although I regret it, that an opportunity should be afforded to the police authority of showing that the service for the required period of twenty-five years had not been diligent and faithful, and therefore this case must be remitted to the court of quarter sessions.

Lord ROBERTSON.—On the first point I do not differ; on the second point I entirely agree. The relative functions of the police authority and the chief constable may, I think, be thus stated. The quality of the service has to be ascertained by the police authority, and the chief constable, taking the word of the police authority for its quality, is then, on that footing, to certify its period.

Lord ATKINSON.—I think that the words of section 1 in their natural meaning are not confined to continuous service, and I do not think that there is any such repugnancy between that construction of them and the provisions of the other sections of the Act to which reference has been made as would oblige this House to confine them to continuous service. With regard to the second point, I think it clear upon the construction of sub-sections 1 and 2 of section 4 that the functions of the police authority and the chief constable are respectively that the chief constable certifies to the length of the service, and the police authority has to certify to its character and nature. In arriving at its character and nature they were, I think, entitled to receive the evidence which was tendered but rejected.

SMITH AND OTHERS v. JUSTICES OF PORTSMOUTH. (a.)

Licensing law—Renewal of licence—Order for "alterations" in premises—Structural alterations—Order to keep entrance door locked—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 11, sub-section 4.

Section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902—which empowers licensing justices, on renewing a licence, to order that such alterations as they think reasonably necessary to secure the proper conduct of the business shall be made in that part of the premises where intoxicating liquor is sold or consumed—only gives power to the justices to order structural alterations.

Upon an application for the renewal of a licence the licensing justices, purporting to act under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902, made an order that the entrance door from one of two streets upon which the licensed premises abutted should be kept locked and not used except for certain purposes, the object being to confine the sale of liquor to that part of the premises which opened on to the other street.

Held, that this was not an order for a structural alteration, and was not within the power of the licensing justices under section 11, sub-section 4.

Appeal from the judgment of the Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley and Darling, JJ.) on a case stated by the Recorder of Portsmouth sitting at quarter sessions. The appellants at quarter sessions were the licensed occupier and the owners of a public-house, called the Naval Hotel, Portsea, who appealed against an order made by the licensing justices of Portsmouth.

The appellant, Alfred Arthur Smith, was the holder of a full licence at the Naval Hotel, and in accordance with a notice served upon him in that behalf, he deposited with the clerk to the respondent justices, on applying for a renewal of his licence, a plan of the licensed premises, showing the several entrances to the premises from two parallel streets known as Wickham-street and Havant-street respectively, with the dimensions and description of each room and the position of every counter, screen, and partition. The respondent justices at the adjourned annual licensing meeting, held on the 8th of March, 1905, purporting to act under section 11 (4) of the Licensing Act, 1902, made an order that the following alterations, which the justices therein stated that they thought reasonably necessary to secure the proper conduct of the business, should within the space of six months be made by the said Alfred Arthur Smith in that part of the premises where intoxicating liquor was sold or consumed, that was to say: "With a view to confining the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor to the Wickham-street end of the said premises, the entrance door to the bottle and jug department of the said premises in Havant-street shall be nailed up, and the entrance door to the public bar of the said premises in the same street shall be kept locked and not used except for domestic purposes or for delivering intoxicating liquor, coals, or other goods when necessary, or for the private use of the licensee or his household or bonâ fide lodgers on the said premises, and the key of such entrance to the said public bar in Havant-street shall be kept by the licensee." The plan showed that the premises had public bars and bottle and jug entrances in two distinct parallel streets—Wickham-street and Havant-street. The premises were 136ft. in length from one street to the other, and did not exceed 14ft. 3in. in width at the parts occupied at the bars.

Counsel for the respondent justices contended, first, that the alterations directed by the order to be made were structural alterations and properly directed in accordance with section 11 (4) of the Licensing Act, 1902, on which they cited Bushell v. Hammond, 52 W. R. 453, [1904] 2 K. B. 563; and, secondly, that the justices could make an order for any alteration, structural or non-structural, in the licensed premises, and that the correct interpretation of the Act was that, if such order directed structural alterations, then no other requisition for structural alterations could be made within the next five years.

Counsel for the appellants contended that the order of the justices was without jurisdiction; that the things therein ordered under the name of alterations to be made in that part of the premises where intoxicating liquor was sold or consumed were not alterations, or alternatively were not alterations within the meaning of section 11 (4) of the said Act; that the order, under the pretence of ordering alterations, in fact sought to impose upon the appellant, Alfred Arthur Smith, an undertaking to keep and observe certain conditions with reference to the conduct of his licensed premises contrary to law; and that the order, under the pretence of ordering things necessary to secure the proper conduct of the business in fact prohibited all the business theretofore legitimately carried on at the Havant-street entrance to the premises.

The recorder held that section 11 (4) only conferred on the justices power to order alterations in the licensed premises and alterations of a structural character, and that, while the part of the order as to nailing up one door might be within the section, the rest of the order was not, as it did not purport to order structural alterations or any alterations in the premises at all, and that the latter part of the order was, therefore, ultrà vires, and he quashed the whole order, as in his judgment the first part by itself was unnecessary and useless. Apart from this, he thought the order reasonable and within the justices' jurisdiction.

The question for the High Court was whether the justices had jurisdiction to make the order.

The Divisional Court were of opinion that the justices had jurisdiction to make the order, and they accordingly reversed the decision of the recorder.

The appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Pickford, K.C., and S. H. Emanuel (H. Brodrick with them) for the appellants.—The word "alteration" in section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902, means a structural alteration. The alteration must be an alteration in the premises, and not in the mode of carrying on business in the premises. The closing of an entrance door cannot be called an "alteration" in the premises. Nor is it an alteration in the means of access to that part of the licensed premises where intoxicating liquor is sold or consumed, within the decision in Bushell v. Hammond, 52 W. R. 453, [1904] 2 K. B. 563. The physical means of access is not altered; the only alteration is that certain persons alone can use it. In Bushell v. Hammond the point was not taken that an order to close a back entrance to licensed premises was not an order for a structural alteration. It was assumed that the alteration was structural, and the only question was whether it was an alteration in that part of the premises covered by the Act. In Rex v. Dodds, 53 W. R. 559, [1905] 2 K. B. 40, it was held that under the Licensing Act, 1904, licensing justices have no power to make the renewal of an on-licence conditional on the applicant giving an undertaking as to the conduct and management of the business in respect of matters not covered by the grounds for refusing the renewal specified in section 1. That throws light on the earlier Act of 1902, and shows that an order for an alteration there contemplated must be something different from an order as to the conduct and management of the business. The decision of the Divisional Court was therefore wrong.

Horace Avory, K.C., and C. Tyrrell Giles, for the respondent justices.—An "alteration" within the meaning of section 11, sub-section 4, need not be a structural alteration. In Bushell v. Hammond an order that the back entrance to licensed premises should be closed by means of a gate to be kept locked was held to be within the power of licensing justices under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Act. The closing of the door as a means of access to the licensed premises was taken to be an "alteration" within the meaning of section 11, sub-section 4. It is obvious that if the present point was a good one it would have been taken in that case. That case, therefore, shows that an "alteration" within that sub-section need not be a structural alteration in the strict sense of the term. The order in the present case was for an alteration in the premises within sub-section 2, and it therefore comes within sub-section 4. The words "structural alteration" do not occur in the section until towards the end of sub-section 4, and those words are satisfied by saying that they mean that if the alteration ordered is of a structural character, no further structural alteration shall be ordered for five years. Sub-section 5 is intended to provide for notice being given to the owner of the premises when an order for structural alterations is made, so as to enable him to appeal against the order. The alteration in this case was an alteration which the justices thought reasonably necessary to secure the proper conduct of the business. If the licensee opened a door, which was formerly used for domestic purposes only as a means of access to the licensed premises for trade customers, that would be an alteration in the premises for the purpose of giving increased facilities for drinking within sub-section 2, and therefore an alteration within sub-section 4. The converse happened here, but still it is an alteration in the premises. Secondly, if section 11, sub-section 4, only applies to a structural alteration, this was an order for a structural alteration. The order to keep locked a door which had before that time been used as a means of access to the licensed premises is an order for an alteration in the character of the premises from a trade point of view, and the alteration may therefore be properly described as a structural alteration. No distinction can be drawn between nailing up a door, which is admitted to be a structural alteration, and locking a door. The words ought not to be construed so strictly as in a case between landlord and tenant, but should receive a wide interpretation so as to give effect to the policy of the Legislature to give the justices power to see that the business is properly conducted.

Pickford, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from the Divisional Court overruling the decision of the Recorder of Portsmouth. The recorder stated a case for the opinion of the court, and the question turns upon the construction of the Licensing Act, 1902. The question is whether a certain order made by the licensing justices of Portsmouth was within their powers. The case came before the licensing justices upon an application for the renewal of a licence for a public-house. The licensed premises opened on to two streets,

"Preliminary" contracts are for the purpose of carrying on the business of the company as well as other contracts, otherwise they would be ultrà vires of the company.

BUCKLEY, J.—The question to be determined is whether Mr. Jenkins, who claims to be a creditor of the company, can, having regard to section 6, sub-section 3, of the Companies Act, 1900, be heard to say that he is a creditor. Section 6 is one which provides that a "company shall not commence any business"—it is not shall not commence "its business," but "any business"—unless certain conditions are complied with. The word "provisional" in the sub-section means, I think, this, that the contract is to be read as if it contained a provision that it shall not be binding on the company unless and until the company becomes entitled to commence business. Now this company never did become entitled to commence business; therefore any contract made by the company was provisional and not binding on the company. But Mr. Coldridge has argued that the Act of Parliament does not mean what it says, that it does not mean any contract, but any contract of a certain kind; and his next difficulty is to define of what kind. He says that it means any contract entered into for the purpose of carrying on its business, and that there are some contracts which are not entered into for the purpose of carrying on the business, but which are what he calls "preliminary"—expenses incurred with a view to the future carrying on of business. I think that argument is altogether unsound. A company of this kind has no purpose of existence other than the carrying on of its business, and every contract which it enters into must be a contract entered into for the purposes of its business in some form or other; whether it is preliminary or final, or one in the course of carrying on its business, makes no difference. All its contracts must be with relation to its business; and I repeat that the language of the section is that "the company shall not commence any business" until certain conditions have been complied with. We are all familiar with the fact that under a previous system of legislation there was what was known as "provisional registration" and "complete registration." I think this sub-section is intended as a return to some extent to the provisions which were contemplated by that system of legislation. The intention here is that, if the company never becomes entitled to commence business, nobody shall be able to say that he can sue the company in contract; the contract must be one which impliedly contains a provision that, unless and until the company is entitled to commence business, the company is not bound. Those being the general questions, the exact facts here are these. The claimant, Mr. Jenkins, to take one instance, went to a furniture dealer, bought furniture, and had it put into an office which he took for the company. He says that he has paid the furniture dealer in respect of that the sum of £240, and he says: "I claim payment of that by the company." How does he claim? Obviously in contract; and he claims upon this ground—that, expressly or by implication, the company promised to pay him for the furniture if he would pay the furniture dealer for it. Of course that is a contract. The Act of Parliament says that that contract is not binding on the company, and he cannot sue here. The other claims are for moneys which he advanced to a man to come up to town when he was going to serve the company, and other payments of a like kind. They are all claims in contract. In my judgment he cannot be heard to say that there was such a contract; the Act of Parliament forbids it. I declare that as the company was never entitled to commence business no contract entered into by it is binding on the company, and that Mr. Jenkins' claim, which is the only one before me, must be disallowed.

SLATER v. SLATER. (a.)

Will—Legacy—Specific gift—Ademption—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 24.

A testator by his will bequeathed the interest on his money invested in a certain security to his wife for her life. During the testator's life the security in question, which was held by the testator at the date of his will, was taken by a statutory authority and a new security given in its stead.

Held, that the new security held by the testator at the date of death did not pass under the bequest, the will speaking from the death.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons by the testator's widow, Mrs. Catherine P. Slater, to determine the validity of a bequest contained in the will.

The testator by his will dated the 3rd of February, 1904, made the following bequest: "To Catherine P. Slater I bequeath the interest for life arising from money invested as follows:" Then followed a list of securities, one of which was stock in the Lambeth Waterworks Co.

At the date of his will the testator was possessed of £1,075 10 per cent. Lambeth Waterworks Stock.

The Metropolitan Water Act was passed on the 18th of December, 1902, and on the 24th of June, 1904, the day appointed by that Act, the Metropolitan Water Board took over the undertaking of the Lambeth Co.

On the 7th of June, 1904, the Lambeth Co. passed a resolution to take payment for their undertaking in stock of the Metropolitan Water Board instead of in cash, and £3,379 Metropolitan Water Board "B" stock was allotted to the testator in respect of his said holding in the Lambeth Co. This stock was held by the testator at the date of his death.

The testator died on the 15th of May, 1905, and his will was duly proved.

Badcock, K.C., and Methold, for the plaintiff.—This is a gift of money invested in a certain way; if the money can be traced into the new investment it passes under the bequest. Here the money can be so traced, and there is no ademption: Le Grice v. Finch, 3 Merivale 53; Sidney v. Sidney, 22 W. R. 101, 17 Eq. 65.

Younger, K.C., and Newton, for the residuary legatee.—This is a specific bequest; the subject-matter is not in the testator's possession at the date of the death, and the will speaks from the death. The gift therefore fails: In re Grey, Dresser v. Grey, 36 Ch. D. 205; Page v. Young, 23 W. R. 479, 19 Eq. 501; Harrison v. Jackson, 7 Ch. D. 339, 26 W. R. (a.) Reported by H. WOLCOTT WARNER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

JOYCE, J., in giving judgment, after reading the terms of the bequest, said: The question I have to decide is the effect of the gift as to money of the testator's invested in Lambeth Water Stock at the date of the will, which stock was subsequently, in the testator's lifetime, converted into Metropolitan Water Board "B" Stock. Both parties assert that the bequest is specific, and certainly it is not general or demonstrative; but the parties differ as to what is given; some say the bequest gives the investment or security as at the date of the will, and that as that no longer existed at the date of the death that the legacy is adeemed; other parties say that the amount or value of the investment or security is given, and that what can be traced into another investment passes under the bequest.

In cases of this kind the first questions to be decided are, What does the will mean? and What is it, and where is that, which was bequeathed? No doubt a bequest may be so worded as to show that the subject-matter is to pass apart from the state of investment, and that depends on the question whether the testator intended to make the gift irrespective of the state of investment.

But section 24 of the Wills Act makes a will, in effect, comprise property at the death of the testator. This section is often difficult to apply. If the subject-matter of a gift be not a specified sum, but be described as general, it may from its nature be capable of increase or decrease during the testator's lifetime. In Goodlad v. Burnett Wood, V.C., says: "The testatrix here says 'my New Three-and-a-quarter per cent. Annuities,' not using any words defining the particular amount—not defining the stock in any way, except that which the court, before the Wills Act, held to point to specific stock which was at the time of making the will in the possession of the testator or testatrix. . . . But then the Wills Act was passed, and that Act must have some sense given to it as regards personal estate. It is true that, as regards general personal estate, there was no doubt before the passing of the Wills Act that the will spoke from the death in most cases, but not in all; and it is precisely to the particular class of cases, of which the present is an instance, that the Wills Act would seem to have application."

In the present case the bequest is not of a definite sum nor of Lambeth Water Stock, and on the words of the will I come to the conclusion that this is one of the class of cases referred to by Wood, V.C., and therefore as a matter of construction, and of construction only, I hold that the bequest passed only so much money as the testator had invested in Lambeth Water Stock at the date of his death, and consequently that the stock which was converted into Metropolitan Water Board Stock in the testator's lifetime does not pass. There must be a declaration accordingly.

Trustee—Investments—Nominal debentures under Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83)—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 1 (g); s. 5, sub-section 3; s. 50.

Trust funds were invested on a mortgage of rates executed by a corporation. The mortgage was a nominal debenture. The trustees under the will had not any express powers of investing in nominal debentures, but they were not expressly forbidden to do so by the instrument creating the trust.

Held, that section 5 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1893, extends only to trustees having express power in the instrument authorizing the investment, and is an enlargement of the express power, and not a further enlargement of the general powers conferred by section 1.

The nominal debenture was not an authorized investment.

Originating summons.

This was an application to distribute the residue of a testator's estate on the assumption that proper appropriation had been made for certain legacies settled by the will and directed to be appropriated.

A question was raised as to whether a particular investment was authorized or not, and the matter was referred to the court.

The Trustee Act, 1893, provides: Section 1. "A trustee may, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument (if any) creating the trust, invest any trust funds in his hands, whether at the time in a state of investment or not, in manner following, that is to say: . . . (g) In the debenture or rent-charge, or guaranteed or preference stock of any railway company in Great Britain or Ireland incorporated by special Act of Parliament, and having during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment paid a dividend at the rate of not less than three per centum per annum on its ordinary stock."

Section 5 (3): "A trustee having power to invest money in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway or other company may, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument authorizing the investment, invest in any nominal debentures or nominal debenture stock issued under the Local Loans Act, 1875."

Section 50: "The expression instrument includes Act of Parliament."

SWINFEN EADY, J., in giving judgment, said: This is a summons to proceed under the order dated the 26th of October, 1905. Upon the proceedings in chambers a question was raised as to whether a particular investment was authorized or not, and it is upon this point alone that the summons has been adjourned to me,

The will of the testator, W. Pratt Tattersall, is dated the 6th of December, 1884. It contains a trust to invest the proceeds of his real and personal estate "upon real securities in England or upon any such Government, Parliamentary, or other stocks, funds, debentures, or other securities as trustees are by law authorized to invest trust funds upon, with power to call in or change such investments at their discretion." The testator died on the 8th of December, 1886. A part of trust funds, about £10,000, has been invested on a mortgage of rates, executed by the corporation of Bradford under the powers of section 107 of the Public Health Act, 1848. The mortgage is by deed and in the form authorized by section 111 of the same Act, and otherwise complies with the statutory requirements, and the only question is whether such a mortgage is authorized as regards funds settled by the will of this testator.

By the Local Loans Act, 1875, s. 4, a local authority shall be deemed to borrow subject to the provisions of that Act whenever it raises a loan by the issue of debentures purported to be created under its powers. By section 5 a debenture under that Act shall be an instrument taking effect as a deed and charging the local rate on property in such debenture specified with payment, as in the debenture mentioned, of the principal sum and interest therein specified. A debenture in which the principal sum is made payable to a person named therein, his executors, administrators, or assigns, is in the Act referred to as a "nominal debenture."

The mortgage in question fulfils these requirements and is therefore a nominal debenture. But the question is, can trustees of this will invest in nominal debentures issued under the Local Loans Act, 1875. Section 27 of that Act, enabling trustees with certain powers of investment to invest in loans under that Act, was repealed by section 51 of the Trustee Act, 1893, but was re-enacted by section 5, sub-section 3, of the same statute, with a verbal modification.

It was decided by Bacon, V.C., in In re Maberly, 34 W. R. 771, 33 Ch. D. 455, that trustees having the powers of investment authorized by section 21 of the Settled Land Act—that is to say, entitled to invest in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway company "having for ten years next before the date of investment paid a dividend on its ordinary stock or shares" may not invest in debentures or debenture stock issued by a local authority under that Act. This decision, however, does not determine the present case, as the Vice-Chancellor laid stress upon the words "have the same power of investing" which occur in section 27 of the Local Loans Act, but are not repeated in section 5 (3) of the Trustee Act.

The trustees of this will have not any express power of investing in nominal debentures, and can only do so if they come within section 5 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1893. In order to bring them within this sub-section it was contended that under the Trustee Act, s. 1 (g), as they are not expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust, they may invest in the debenture stock of any railway in Great Britain or Ireland, incorporated by special Act of Parliament, and having during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment paid a dividend at the rate of not less than three per centum per annum on its ordinary stock, and that the trustees are therefore trustees "having power to invest money in the debenture stock of any railway company" within section 5 (3). It may be doubted whether trustees having power to invest in the debenture stock of certain railway companies only, which fall within a particular category, have power to invest "in the debenture stock of any railway company," but the true answer to the argument is that section 5 (3) extends only to trustees having express power in the instrument authorizing the investment, that it is an enlargement of the express power, and not a further enlargement of the general powers conferred by section 1. Section 5 (3) assumes the existence of an instrument authorizing the investment in railway debenture stock. Again, the powers conferred by sections 1, 2, and 3 are, by section 4, extended to trusts created before the passing of the Act, and are to be in addition to the powers conferred by the instrument (if any) creating the trust. There is no such provision as to the powers in section 5. Moreover, if all trustees, unless forbidden, are to have the power of investing in nominal debentures, I see no reason for separating this power from the other powers comprised in section 1.

Section 5 is a re-enactment of provisions extracted from six different Acts of Parliament, and is difficult to construe, as there does not appear to be any uniformity in its several parts. But in my opinion section 5 (3) is as much an enlargement of express powers, as distinguished from general statutory powers, as section 5 (4) obviously is. I arrive at this conclusion on the construction of the various sections of the Act, notwithstanding that the word "instrument" includes "Act of Parliament" in the definition clause.

I may add that the provision enabling cash under the control of the court to be invested in nominal debentures of a particular description does not avail the applicants, as all the nominal debentures in question on this application are liable to be redeemed within a period of fifteen years from the date of investment.

I therefore determine that the mortgage of rates by the Corporation of Bradford is not an authorized investment.

A seaman signed articles for a voyage to places including ports in Japan, Manchuria, and Siberia. Russia was then at war with Japan, and the ship was captured by a Russian man-of-war, and a few days later was destroyed by the Russians. There was no evidence that she was carrying contraband of war or that her capture was justified. The seamen were sent to England as distressed seamen, and claimed wages up to the time of their arrival in England.

Held, per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., that the ship was "lost" at the time when the ship was destroyed, and, therefore, that the seamen were only entitled to wages up to that time; per Darling, J., that wages ceased when the ship was captured.

Austin Friars Steam Shipping Co. v. Strack, 53 W. R. 661, [1905] 2 K. B. 315, distinguished.

Special case stated by a stipendiary magistrate for the City of Manchester.

On the 14th of September, 1905, the respondent, a seaman, took out a summons under section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, against the appellant, who was the owner of a vessel called The Oldhamia, claiming the sum of £18 15s. 11d. as wages alleged to be due in respect of his services on board the vessel, which was captured and destroyed by the Russians during the recent war with Japan.

The respondent's claim covered a period from the 23rd of March until the 5th of September, 1905, upon which day he returned to this country.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appellant admitted the respondent's claim up to the 18th of May, 1905, the day of the capture, but claimed to be exempted from further payment under the provisions of section 158 of the Act of 1894.

The magistrate made an order that the appellant should pay to the respondent wages from the 23rd of March, 1905, to the 5th of September, 1905, and costs.

The following facts were admitted or proved before the magistrate:

The respondent was a seaman serving on board the British steamship Oldhamia, of which the appellant was the owner. On the 10th of March, 1905, at the British Consulate at New York, the respondent signed the articles of The Oldhamia, then at New York, to serve as able-bodied seaman on the vessel at the rate of £4 per month. The articles, which were read over to the respondent, contained provisions by which he agreed to serve for a voyage not exceeding three years in specified latitudes, Japan, Manchurian, and Siberian ports included. At the time the articles were signed a state of war existed between Russia and Japan. The Oldhamia left New York on the 26th of March, 1905, and her first port of call was stated to be Hong Kong for orders. There was no evidence of what the cargo of The Oldhamia consisted, nor that the subsequent capture by the Russians was justified, nor that her destination was to any belligerent port, and the defendant did not in fact know of what her cargo consisted, or her destination beyond Hong Kong. On the 18th of May, 1905, The Oldhamia was proceeding through the China Sea, and when north of Hong Kong and approaching the Straits of Formosa was captured by the cruiser Oleg, belonging to the Russian Baltic Fleet, and the crew attached to The Oldhamia, including the respondent, were taken on board the Russian cruiser Dneiper, and The Oldhamia steamed away in charge of a Russian prize crew. On the 2nd of June, 1905, The Oldhamia was destroyed by the Russians, and on the 5th of June the respondent was landed at Swatau, taken thence to Hong Kong, and finally sent to England as a distressed seaman, arriving on the 5th of September, 1905. In these circumstances it was contended before the magistrate on behalf of the respondent that he was entitled to wages as a debt to the 14th of September, 1905.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the respondent's right to wages terminated with the capture of the vessel on the 18th of May, 1905, she then being lost within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, or at latest on the 2nd of June, 1905, when the vessel was destroyed. The magistrate decided that the vessel was not lost within the meaning of section 158, and that consequently the respondent was entitled to wages and costs.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the appellant.

S. T. Evans, K.C., and Morgan-Morgan, for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This case raises an important and, from some points of view, a novel question under section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provides that where the service of the seaman terminates before the date contemplated in the agreement, by (inter alia) the wreck or loss of the ship, he shall be entitled to wages up to the time of such termination, but not for any longer period. The Oldhamia, which started from Cardiff, was arrested by the Russian fleet while on a voyage from America to Hong-kong. No question arose as to any shipment of contraband of war, nor was it suggested that the owners themselves had done anything which entitled the seaman to say that his contract was broken on that ground or by conduct on their part justifying the seaman in declining to continue the venture.

The claim was made under section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, which would enable the seaman to recover wages up to the time of his arrival in England, but for the protection, if any, afforded to the owner by section 158, to which I have already referred. The question, therefore, is the construction to be placed by the court on the words "wreck or loss." The magistrate seems to have assumed that he acted, in deciding that the vessel was not "lost" within the meaning of the section, on a passage which occurs in the judgment of Austin Friars Steam Shipping Co. v. Strack, 53 W. R. 661, [1905] 2 K. B. 315, where it was said, "It seems to us very doubtful whether the word 'loss' would in any case include a capture such as this, which is not in the same category as wreck, fire, or stranding, or such termination of a voyage as are brought about by the perils of the seas." When the rest of the judgment is considered, in view of the nature of the case, it cannot be contended that the statement was intended to be or was an exhaustive statement of the law. It was merely a preliminary statement leading up to the judgment. We have been referred to several definitions of the word "loss." I myself do not desire to give an exhaustive definition, but it is quite plain that all the definitions cited would include the common case of loss of a ship by fire, and I have no doubt many others might be found. I am not prepared to go so far as the contention put forward by the learned counsel for the appellant, and to hold that any possible cause rendering the completion of the contract no longer possible was to be regarded as a loss. I think that is too wide a view, and that the words have reference to the existence of a ship as a ship; but whether there can be said to be a loss when the ship continues as a ship, and therefore but for the capture alone might have continued her voyage, I am not bound to consider here, nor do I desire to express any opinion on it. Taking the narrower view I have expressed as the true construction, then we have here an occurrence which is practically contemporaneous with the capture of the ship that destroyed the ship. To hold in such a case as this that the ship, which was in fact destroyed by a cause for which the owners were in no way responsible, was not a "loss" within the meaning of the Act would, in my opinion, be wrong.

The conclusion I have come to is, that this ship was lost at the time that she was destroyed within the meaning of section 158, and that the appeal must be allowed.

RIDLEY, J.—I concur. I do not think that a mere capture by an enemy or the seizure by a pirate would necessarily be construed as a loss within section 158, for one among other reasons that the vessel might be retaken. Many cases of capture, which were followed by recapture, might be cited. There was a French-built ship in the British lines at Trafalgar. She had been taken by the British, but no one could say that she was not a lost ship so far as the French were concerned. The capture of a vessel might result in the loss of the vessel to the owner, without necessarily being a "loss," in my opinion, within the meaning of the section, because I think the word "loss" there is used to mean something equivalent to the destruction of the ship.

In The Austin Friars case the vessel had been confiscated by the prize court, and it is in relation to that fact that the expression, I think, was used in the judgment upon which reliance has been placed. In that case it was not necessary to decide whether the ship had been lost within the meaning of the section.

we are now considering. The real point to be decided in each case is whether that which is relied upon as being the loss is equivalent to the destruction of the ship. For that reason I think the fact that the ship was taken possession of by an enemy or a pirate does not alone constitute a loss within the section.

DARLING, J.—I have come to the same conclusion as the other members of the court in thinking that this vessel was a loss within section 158, but I am also prepared to go further than my learned brothers have done, and to hold that the ship became a loss from the time that she was captured. If the question were merely an academic one I should not trouble to give an additional judgment. But my decision makes a difference in this respect—that the amount the seamen would be entitled to if the "loss" occurred when The Oldhamia was destroyed would be greater than if the "loss" occurred when she was captured. The whole question we have to consider under section 158 is whether the ship was lost to the owner within the meaning of that section. The ship was a British ship, and there was no evidence that she was carrying contraband or was a proper subject of capture by any belligerent. If she had been a proper subject of capture she might have been arrested and taken before a prize court, and then have been either released or condemned. That was not done. She fell in with some ships which as a matter of fact were commanded by persons bearing the commission of Russia, and these ships were at war with Japan. That gave them no sort of right such as that exercised with regard to this ship. What they did was this: One of the Russian ships captured the British ship; they took the crew out of her and put them in a Russian ship, and took The Oldhamia away with them. After some days they destroyed her, and the judgment of the other members of this court would give her crew their wages down to the time that the ship was destroyed. If my view were to prevail, the crew would be entitled to wages only up to the time the vessel was captured. I think that loss under the section means loss by the owner of the ship being permanently deprived of it. Whether she still continues to exist if the owner was permanently deprived of her does not enter into the question; the loss might even be greater if she was not destroyed, because the person who took her away might use her against the people from whom he took her. In the instance mentioned by my brother Ridley, Lord Nelson used the ship which he had taken from the French for firing shots from her against the French from whom he had taken her. It is well known that the same thing happened in the war between Russia and Japan, and to my mind such ships were just as much lost as if they were sunk in battle. They were lost to the owner to whom they belonged and were of no further advantage to him, and if in addition they became a positive disadvantage, I cannot say they were not lost within the meaning of this Act of Parliament. I am unable to see that anything has happened in the present case which would distinguish the case from one of piracy so far as the incidents are concerned. If goods were lost by reason of the dangers of the sea, the carrier was no longer responsible for them, and it has been held over and over again that the acts of pirates come within the exception of dangers of the sea. In the case of the Attorney-General for Hong-kong v. Kwok-a-Sing, 21 W.R. 825, L. R. 5 P. C. App. 179, Mellish, L.J., quoted the definition of piracy given by Sir Charles Hedges in Rex v. Dawson, 13 State Trials 454, as follows: "Piracy is only a sea term for robbery, piracy being robbery within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. . . . If the mariners of any ship shall violently dispossess the master and afterwards carry away the ship itself or any of the goods, with a felonious intention, in any place where the Lord Admiral hath jurisdiction, that is robbery and piracy." The essential element of piracy is that the master is violently dispossessed of the ship, and that afterwards the ship itself or any of the goods were carried away with felonious intent. In the present case I should not call the action of the Russians piracy in the strict sense, because there might not have been any felonious intent. It is very probable that the ship was taken because otherwise she might have carried information to the Japanese, and therefore the felonious intent was probably absent. It is the reason why I should not call it piracy, but all the other incidents were present. The master was violently dispossessed, and there was no occasion, in order to constitute piracy, to destroy the ship. My recollection of reading about pirates is that they were much too wise to sink a ship when they had taken her. They sank the crew and then painted the ship a different colour and used her for their own purposes. In such a case the owner lost the ship just as much as if she were destroyed. In the present case there was every element making this a loss, the ship having been seized and never given back. If she had been arrested and held in some way in suspense and afterwards given back into the owners' possession, I should not go the length of saying that that would constitute a loss. But, seeing that she was arrested unlawfully by force and that she never got back to the possession of her owners, I think that it was a loss within the Act of Parliament quite irrespective of whether she afterwards floated or whether she was destroyed.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—After hearing the judgment of my brother Darling I think I ought to add that in my opinion, having regard to the rights of belligerents as defined by international law, I do not agree that this case can at all be compared to a case of piracy or that the same considerations apply as would apply if it were a case of piracy.

RIDLEY, J.—I desire to say that my opinion on the question of piracy is the same as that expressed by the Lord Chief Justice.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) affirming the Divisional Court.

The action was brought by the appellants to recover the amount of one quarter and certain arrears of the rector's rate whereby the respondent was rated as occupier of certain premises in the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, in pursuance of the provisions of 12 Car. 2, c. 37, and of 51 Geo. 3, c. 150.

The county court judge found the following facts: That the three houses were in the occupation of the respondent; that they communicated by means of a door or doors—11, York-street communicating with 28, Wellington-street, and 28, Wellington-street with 30, Wellington-street; that the houses were occupied as counting-houses and warehouses; that the fireplaces were taken out when the alterations were made by the respondent to make them suitable for the purposes of his business; that there was a gas stove at No. 28, Wellington-street for the warmth of the clerks; that there was a fireplace left in No. 30; and that there were rooms the size of living-rooms, but no rooms fitted up or furnished as bedrooms; that the premises were not, in their then condition, capable of being occupied as dwelling-houses. It was not disputed that the premises had originally formed a single mansion, and had been divided into the premises above described. It was admitted that the respondent employed salesmen and assistants in this business, and that in the church of St. Paul a midday religious service was held during a considerable part of the year for the benefit of shop assistants and others working in the neighbourhood, and that the respondents' premises were within the parish.

By section 3 of 12 Car. 2, "the yearly sum of two hundred and fifty pounds shall from thenceforth be charged upon the houses of the inhabitants of the said parish of St. Paul's, Covent Garden (except the house commonly called Bedford House with the appurtenances)." By section 2 of 51 Geo. 3, c. 150, a sum of £520 "is hereby charged upon all houses within the said parish of Saint Paul, Covent Garden."

The Court of Appeal held itself bound by certain dicta of the court in Surman v. Darley, 14 M. & W. 181.

Macmorran, K.C., and Clarke Hall (F. Barrington Ward with them), for the appellants.

John Sanderson and Walter Frampton, for the respondent.

Lord LOREBURN, L.C.—The point arising on this appeal is quite a short point. It is whether the occupier of a building which consists of 11, York-street, and 28 and 30, Wellington-street, in the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, is liable to a rector's rate made under an Act of 51 Geo. 3, c. 150, following upon an Act of 12 Car. 2. Under the first-named Act the rate is to be borne and paid by the occupiers of all houses within that parish. If these premises are a house or houses within the meaning of this Act, then the appellants must succeed. Otherwise they must fail. The Court of Appeal (and I am sure the Divisional Court also) considered themselves bound by certain dicta in Surman v. Darley, from which they did not feel at liberty to dissent. This was evidently the governing consideration which influenced their judgment. Your lordships are not so bound. The premises in question, of which we have a photograph, certainly bears the external aspect of a house, and except in a court of law one could hardly describe them as anything else. They consist of buildings which communicate with another by doors, and are used as counting-houses and warehouses. All the fireplaces are taken out except one. There are no rooms fitted up or furnished as bedrooms, nor does any one sleep on the premises. In fact, these are former dwelling-houses which have been adapted for their present use by internal changes. The learned judge of the county court has described these changes. And from what he and the witnesses say, it seems clear that slight internal alterations, of which the principal would be restoring the fireplaces, could make them quite capable of being occupied as a dwelling-house again. In their present condition, without those slight alterations, they could not be so used, at all events not in the ordinary way. The Act does not give any definition of what is meant by the word "house," but imports that it shall be a place of residence. If a building is dwelt in—I do not mean the mere presence of a caretaker—no point can arise. If it be not so used, then, in my opinion, the structure and character of the building as a whole should be regarded in order to see whether it is fit or can readily be fitted for such use by any class or condition of persons in the ordinary way of living. Applying that test, I think this building falls within the Act of Parliament, and that therefore the appellants must succeed.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I concur in the judgment which has been given by the Lord Chancellor. The judgment given in the case of Surman v. Darley can in no way be affected by the judgment which has been delivered by my noble friend. The word "dwelling-house" in Surman v. Darley was used probably only by way of contrast with the Opera House, Covent Garden, or the Play House, Drury-lane. But still we are in this position, that no definition is given in the obiter dicta in that case of what is meant by "dwelling."

In the statute itself the word "dwelling" is not to be found. We have therefore to see whether this edifice which has been rated is a house, and whether there is an occupier. If those two things are found to exist as a fact, then I assume that it will be agreed that the ratability attaches under the statute. I must say that it seems to me, as a matter of common sense, looking at this building as constructed and as shewn in the photograph, that it is a house. A man can carry on a business in a house as well as in a warehouse or an office, but if there remains a structure which can be applied for the purposes to which a house is usually applied, I think the words of section 2 of the Act of Geo. 3 are satisfied.

Lord ROBERTSON: I agree in the judgment proposed. I may add that the conclusion arrived at derives substantial support from the occurrence in section 8 of the Act of Charles of the word "dwelling-house," for this shews that when the narrower conception was present to the minds of the Legislature and was intended, it received distinct expression not by the word "house" but "dwelling-house."

Lord ATKINSON: I concur. I think the question turns upon the meaning of the word "house" in these two statutes. I think they must mean "dwelling-house." By a dwelling-house I understand a house in which people actually live, or which is physically capable of being used for human habitation and may be devoted to that purpose.

It was said in argument that people were actually inhabiting the upper portion of the house, the whole structure of which could be treated as a dwelling-house, notwithstanding the alterations made on the ground floor. I think the trivial alterations made in the upper portion of the house do not change its character; on the contrary, it could be easily restored to its former state, and when so restored would be fit for human habitation. I therefore think that it comes within the statutes.

THOMAS v. BRADBURY, AGNEW, & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Defamation—Libel—Fair comment—Privilege—Malice—Extrinsic evidence.

In an action of libel a plea that the words are fair comment on a matter of public interest may, like a plea that the words were published on a privileged occasion, be rebutted by proof of malice, and the plaintiff may prove such malice by extrinsive evidence.

Campbell v. Spottiswoode, 11 W. R. 569, 3 B. & S. 769, and Merivale v. Carson, 36 W. R. 231, 20 Q. B. D. 275, discussed.

Application by the defendants for a new trial or judgment in an action tried before Darling, J., and a jury.

The action was for libel. The plaintiff, Frederick Moy Thomas, was a journalist and critic, and the author of a book entitled "Fifty Years of Fleet Street; being the Life and Recollections of Sir John R. Robinson." The defendants were Messrs. Bradbury, Agnew, & Co., the publishers and proprietors of Punch, and Henry William Lucy, who was a contributor to Punch under the name of "Toby, M.P."

The plaintiff had been at one time the private secretary of Sir John Robinson, who was the editor and manager of the Daily News. The defendant Lucy was for many years connected with the Daily News, and was well acquainted with Sir John Robinson and the plaintiff.

The alleged libel, which was written by the defendant Lucy, and published in Punch of the 23rd of November, 1904, was as follows: "Mangled Remains. Extract from the Recess Diary of Toby, M.P. Been reading 'Fifty Years of Fleet Street,' just issued by Macmillan. Purports to be the 'Life and Recollections of Sir John Robinson,' the man who made, and for a quarter of a century maintained at a high level, the Daily News. The story is written by Mr. F. M. Thomas, who has added a new terror to death. There are biographies of sorts ranging in value with the personality of the subject and the skill of the compiler. The former occasionally suffers from the incapacity of the latter. But at least his individuality is scrupulously observed. Like Don José, what he has said he has said, his observations and written memoranda not being mixed up with what his biographer thinks he himself thought, uttered and recorded. Mr. Thomas goes about the biographer's business in fresh fashion, complacently announced by way of introduction to the volume. 'I have not thought it necessary or desirable,' he writes, 'to indicate in all cases what is his (Sir John Robinson's) and what is my own. If there is anything amusing or entertaining in these pages, I am quite content that my dear old chief should have the credit of it. The dulness I take upon myself.' Here be generosity! Here magnanimity! It is true that in the performance of his task Mr. Thomas occasionally falls from this high estate. More than once he airily alludes to 'our diary' and 'our notes,' as if he had prepared them in collaboration with his chief. Possibly conscious for a moment of this indiscretion, and reverting to more generous mood, he, approaching a particular narrative, introduces it with the remark, 'the incident may be given in the diarist's own words.' The procedure is perhaps not unusual with earlier biographers. With Mr. Thomas the lapse is rare. When he does let the hapless subject speak for himself, he is relegated to small type. For the rest, it is Mr. Thomas who loquitur, retelling poor Robinson's cherished stories as if they were his own, sometimes with heavy hand brushing off the bloom. Even in these depressing circumstances there is no mistaking Robinson's sly humour, his gift of graphic characterization. The worst of it is that, happening in the very same page upon some banal remark, some pompous platitude, the alarmed reader, recognizing Mr. Thomas, hastily turns over half-a-dozen pages, and possibly misses a handful of the genuine ore. These are hard lines, unjust to Robinson, unfair to the public. It is plain to see, from the few unmutilated extracts from Robinson's manuscript which illuminate the book, that the materials at hand for a delightful biography were abundant. For nearly forty years the manager of the Daily News lived in the very heart of things. He was behind most scenes of public life, was more or less intimately acquainted with the principal personages figuring in it. His sympathies were bountifully wide, his observation alert, his sense of humour keen. He loved his newspaper work with almost passionate affection. For him fifty years of Fleet-street were worth a cycle of Cathay. That he habitually made notes of what he saw and heard with the view to publication in biographical form is undoubted. Mr. Thomas, impregnable in the chain armour of complacency, positively admits it. 'Robinson,' he says, 'did leave some diaries'—'our diaries'—'more or less fragmentary, and a number of thick, closely-written volumes of jottings in his own handwriting, descriptive of events of which he had been an eye-witness and people he had seen and known.' Where is this treasure trove? Presumably portions the biographer was good enough to regard as worth adapting are filtered through the wordy pages of larger type. Happily the material is so good, its original literary form so excellent, that even this unparalleled atrocity cannot quite spoil the book. We who knew Robinson on his throne in Bouverie-street and at the well-known table in the dining-room of the Reform Club, rich in recollections of William Black, Payn, and Sala; who watched him enjoying himself like a boy at theatre first nights; who recognized his rare capacity as a newspaper man; who knew the kind heart hidden behind a studiously cultured severity of manner in business relations—we, perhaps jealously, cherish his memory, and regret the surprising chance that has made possible this slight upon it."

The defence was that the words complained of were incapable of a defamatory meaning, and further, that they were published as a criticism and fair comment upon the plaintiff's book, and were a fair and bonâ fide criticism and comment upon the book, which was a matter of public interest.

The case for the plaintiff at the trial was that the article bore on the face of it evidence of malice, and reliance was also laid on extrinsic evidence of malice—viz. proof of unfriendly relations between plaintiff and the defendant Lucy before the publication of the libel, certain observations made by the defendant

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lucy in the witness-box, and the adoption of the unusual course of devoting the whole of an article in Punch to the review of a book.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £300 damages, and judgment was entered accordingly.

Scrutton, K.C. (J. R. Atkin with him), for the defendants, in support of the application for a new trial or judgment.—The defendants are entitled to have judgment for them on authority of McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., 51 W. R. 689, [1903] 2 K. B. 100. No reasonable jury could say that this article was not an honest criticism on the merits of a book and the merits of the writer as an author. Criticism on a book is not actionable unless the critic either makes a misstatement of fact, or going beyond the limits of criticism attacks the personal character of the author, or uses the occasion of criticism as a cloak for mere invective: McQuire v. Western Morning News Co.; and Merivale v. Carson, 36 W. R. 231; 20 Q. B. D. 275. In Togert v. Cycle Trade Publishing Co., [1904] 2 K. B. 292, Vaughan Williams, L.J., said, "Even in the case of a criticism of a literary production, if the writer goes on to make suggestions and reflections disparaging the character of the author, even as an author, he cannot rely upon the defence of fair comment." That goes too far. It is almost impossible in criticizing a book not to criticize the author as an author. To say that a man has written a bad book is to say that, so far as that book is concerned, he is a bad writer. Where the defence to an action of libel is concerned, he is a bad writer. Where the defence to an action of libel is fair comment, the motive of the defendant in publishing the words complained of is immaterial and the question of malice does not arise. The law as to fair comment is not a branch of the law of privilege: Campbell v. Spottiswoode, 11 W. R. 569, 3 B. & S. 769, from Crompton and Blackburn, JJ. This view was affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Merivale v. Carson, notwithstanding the contrary opinion of Willes, J., in Henwood v. Harrison. 20 W. R. 1000, L. R. 7 C. P. 606.

Dickens, K.C., and E. F. Spence, for the plaintiff.—The case was for the jury. In McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., Collins, M.R., said: "No doubt in most cases of this class there are expressions in the impugned document capable of being interpreted as falling outside the limit of honest criticism, and therefore it is proper to leave the question to the jury, and in all cases where there may be a doubt it may be convenient to take the opinion of a jury." This article, besides containing untrue statements, as—e.g. that the plaintiff passed off Sir John Robinson's work as his own, and that the plaintiff had abundant materials for a biography at hand, attacked the plaintiff as an author generally. It is not permissible to attack an author even as an author, if the attack goes outside the particular book in question. This article conveys the impression that the plaintiff was such an incompetent author that he ought not to have been selected to write the book at all. The law as to fair comment is part of the law of privilege, and the question of malice is material: Henwood v. Harrison, and Wason v. Walter, 17 W. R. 169, L. R. 4 Q. B. 73.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 25th.—COLLINS, M.R., read the following judgment: This is an appeal by the defendants from the verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in an action of libel tried before Darling, J., and a special jury based on a critique of a book written by the plaintiff. The critique was written by the defendant Lucy, and appeared in Punch, of which the first defendants are the publishers. The defence was fair comment. The learned judge refused to withdraw the case from the jury, who found for the plaintiff, with £300 damages. The defendants do not complain of misdirection other than that involved in holding that there was any evidence fit for the consideration of a jury. They ask for judgment on the ground that there was nothing in the article which any reasonable jury could find to fall outside the limits of fair comment, or in the alternative they ask for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. They pressed us strongly with the case of McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., a decision of this court in an action for libel in respect of an article criticising adversely a play of which the plaintiff was the author, where the court set aside a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that there was no evidence on which a rational verdict for the plaintiff could be founded. There were, however, two distinctions between that case and the present. There was admittedly in that case no evidence of actual malice unless it could be inferred from the terms of the article itself, and there was some reason for supposing that the direction was misleading. In the present case the plaintiff's counsel strenuously contended that there was extrinsic evidence of malice in the proved relations of the parties before the action; the special manner in which the particular article appeared in Punch; and in the expressions which fell from the defendant Lucy, coupled with his demeanour in the witness-box, and they relied also on the terms of an apology subsequently printed as fortifying their contention. They urged besides that the language of the article itself raised a question for the jury as to its meaning, and that upon their view of its meaning would depend the question whether it exceeded the bounds of fair comment or not. The question, therefore, for our decision is whether there was any evidence upon which a rational verdict for the plaintiff could be founded. If so, the learned judge was bound to leave it to the jury. I have already said that extrinsic evidence of malice, which I have attempted to summarize, was allowed to go to the jury. The defendants contended that this evidence amounted to nothing, and that no reasonable jury could act upon it, but they also raised a contention which alone, as it seems to me, gives any importance to this case. Their point was that if the article itself, apart from the extrinsic evidence, did not raise a case for the jury that the bounds of fair comment had been overstepped, proof of actual malice on the part of the writer could not affect the question or disturb his immunity. This is a formidable contention. It involves the assertion that fair comment is absolute, not relative, and must be measured by an abstract standard; that it is a thing quite apart from the opinions and motives of its author and his personal relations towards the writer of the thing criticised. It involves the position also that an action based on a criticism is wholly outside the ordinary law of libel, of which malice, express or implied, has always been considered to be the gist. The basis of this contention, such as it is, appears to be a misconception of the effect of the gloss, if I may so phrase it, first put upon the law of libel in relation to fair comment in the dicta of Crompton and Blackburn, JJ., in Campbell v. Spottiswoode, decided in 1863, and subsequently approved in Merivale v. Carson, decided in 1887. I have already had occasion to examine the effect of these views upon the law of libel in McQuire v. Western Morning News Co. In my opinion the substance of the matter remains unchanged and malice remains exactly where it did. The dicta no doubt assert the etymological inexactitude of the word privilege as connoting a right common to the public at large, and the limits of the right itself are pointed out which, whether it be called privilege or by any other name, does not extend to cover misstatements of fact however bonâ fide; but they in no degree affect the standard by which the fairness of the comment is to be judged or relieve the commentator from liability, if the comment be malicious, if indeed it can then be described as comment at all. The right, though shared by the public, is the right of every individual who asserts it, and is, qua him, an individual right whatever name it be called by, and comment by him which is coloured by malice cannot from his standpoint be deemed fair. He and he only is the person in whose motives the plaintiff in the libel action is concerned, and if he, the person sued, is proved to have allowed his view to be distorted by malice, it is quite immaterial that somebody else might without malice have written an equally damnatory criticism. The defendant, and not that other person, is the party sued. This seems to me quite clear in point of principle; but, as already pointed out in McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., the law continued to be administered after Campbell v. Spottiswoode just as it always had been before, down to and since Merivale v. Carson. That case decided nothing inconsistent with the law of libel as thus administered though each of the learned judges expressed an opinion in favour of the view taken in the dicta I have referred to of Crompton and Blackburn, JJ., in preference to that of Willes, J., in Henwood v. Harrison. But, as already pointed out, in McQuire v. Western Morning News Co. the difference between the two views is, in the language of Bowen, L.J., in Merivale v. Carson, a difference in the "metaphysical exposition" of the right and "is rather academical than practical." I think the head note in the case is to some extent the cause of what seems to me an erroneous impression as to the effect of the decision. The words of that note seem to suggest a difference of right, under the general law of libel, in respect of communications made on a privileged occasion and communications made in the shape of criticism on a matter of public interest. In cases of privilege, properly so called, nothing that falls outside the privilege is protected by it, and if defamatory must be otherwise justified. The occasion being privileged, the extent of the privilege may vary according to the nature of the case and the limits of the right or duty which is the basis of the privilege. But this is precisely the position in the case where the right exercised is one shared by the rest of the public and not one limited to an individual or a class. The extent of the right has to be ascertained, and in respect of any communication which falls within it, the immunity, if it be not absolute, can be displaced only by proof of malice. In the case of comment on literary works the occasion is created by the publication, and a right then arises to criticize honestly, however adversely. No such occasion would arise in respect of a private unpublished letter. If a writer were to get hold of a private letter of a well-known author and publish a damnatory article on the author's literary style and taste, as evidenced by the letter, it seems to me that he would have no immunity from the ordinary law in respect of defamatory writings. The only difference, then, in the legal incidents of ordinary privilege, limited to individuals on the one hand and the right in the public to criticize on the other, would seem to be that the one might, with somewhat less latitude than the other, though not, perhaps, with perfect accuracy, be described as "privilege." Now, the headnote might possibly suggest, at first sight at all events, particularly when it adds, "Henwood v. Harrison dissented from," that not merely an academical difference in the analysis of rights had been expressed, but that there was a difference of substance in the bearing of malice in the two cases in respect of communications or criticisms falling primâ facie within the right or privilege. The limits of the right, as I have already pointed out, may be, and are, different, but the law with respect to communications that primâ facie fall within them is the same. Proof of malice may take a criticism primâ facie fair outside the right of fair comment, just as it takes a communication primâ facie privileged outside the privilege. The particular allegation which was unprotected in Merivale v. Carson was never within the "right" when the facts were ascertained by the jury in interpreting the passage impugned. Proof of bonâ fide belief was therefore irrelevant; nothing but proof of the truth could justify the allegation. If the analysis be strictly carried out it will be found that the two rights, whatever name they are called by, are governed by precisely the same rules. The only practical difference is that in an action based on a criticism of a published work the transaction begins by the admission, on the part of the plaintiff, implied from the averment by him of publication of the work criticised, that the comment came into existence on a protected occasion. He is placed, therefore, in precisely the same position as he would have been in had he sued in respect of a defamatory writing primâ facie unprotected and therefore actionable, but had gone on to aver facts which created a privilege strictly so called. Beginning thus at this stage in the transaction, he would have accepted the onus of proving malice in fact. If he had veiled the fact that the writing criticized had become matter of public interest by publication it would have been primâ facie libellous, and the defendant would have had to plead such a publication as would let in the right to comment on a matter of public interest in order to bring himself within the protection. This shows that acceptance of the dicta under discussion does not in the slightest degree affect the place of malice in the law of libel, and that it is only by leaving out one step in the analysis that the public right, as distinguished from the privilege, may appear to carry with it different incidents. There is not even any decision that the word privilege, as used in Henwood v. Harrison, to which Lord Esher was himself a party, is not as good a word as any substitute that can be suggested to express the right by which, in certain circumstances, writings defamatory of another person may be published with impunity, because the presumption of malice is negatived. For the reasons I have given, the difference is one of words only and could not be a matter of legal decision. I have thought it worth while to sift this contention somewhat elaborately, as it is apparently based upon a misconception which seems to have a tendency to repeat itself as to the effect of Merivale v. Carson on the law of libel. But the contention of the defendants can be met not by reference to principle only, but also by direct authority. To go back to the source itself of the supposed new departure, Campbell v. Spottiswoode, Blackburn, J., says, at p. 781: "Honest belief may be an ingredient to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether the publication is a libel, that is, whether it exceeds the limits of fair and proper comment." In Merivale v. Carson itself, Lord Esher, M.R., at p. 281, deals with the question. He says: "It is said that if in some other case the alleged libel would not be beyond the limits of fair criticism, and it could be shown that the defendant was not really criticising the work, but was writing with an indirect and dishonest intention to injure the plaintiffs, still the motive would not make the criticism a libel. I am inclined to think that it would, and for this reason, that the comment would not then really be a criticism of the work. The mind of the writer would not be that of a critic, but he would be actuated by an intention to injure the author." Though the learned judge in this passage expresses only an inclination of opinion, the reason given seems to me to be conclusive. But, in a very recent case in this court, the point is actually decided: Plymouth Mutual Co-operative and Industrial Society v. Traders' Publishing Association, ante, p. 319, [1906] 1 K. B. 403. The question there was whether an interrogatory addressed to the state of mind of the defendant, who had pleaded fair comment in an action of libel, was admissible. The court decided that it was, following a previous decision of this court in a case of privilege strictly so called. Vaughan Williams, L.J., referring to Elliott v. Garrett, 50 W. R. 504, [1902] 1 K. B. 870, says: "It seems to me that that case shows that an interrogatory of this kind is just as relevant and admissible in a case where the defence is fair comment as in one where it is privilege. In either case the question raised is really as to the state of mind of the defendant when he published the alleged libel, the question being in the one case whether he published it in the spirit of malice, in the other whether he published it in the spirit of unfairness. In either case, I think such an interrogatory as the one now in question is admissible." Moulton, L.J., says: "I am clear that both in cases in which the defence of privilege and in those in which the defence of fair comment is set up, the state of mind of the defendant when he published the alleged libel is a matter directly in issue." It is, of course, possible for a person to have a spite against another and yet to bring a perfectly dispassionate judgment to bear upon his literary merits; but, given the existence of malice, it must be for the jury to say whether it has warped his judgment. Comment distorted by malice cannot in my opinion be fair on the part of the person who makes it. I am of opinion, therefore, that evidence of malice actuating the defendant was admissible, and that the learned judge was right in letting the evidence in this case go to the jury. But I am also of opinion, on a close examination of the alleged libel, that, apart from the extrinsic evidence of malice, the learned judge could not have withdrawn the case from the jury. One point made by the plaintiff would, I think, of itself suffice to establish this position. The defendant Lucy says in the alleged libel "it is plain to see from the few unmutilated extracts . . . that the materials at hand for a delightful biography were abundant." This statement was described by the plaintiff in a letter to the editor of Punch as "simply untrue." A short statement was thereupon published in the issue of the 7th of December, in which the defendant, while accepting the plaintiff's statement as to the paucity of materials, quotes a passage from the preface to the book dealing with the existence of materials, and concludes thus: "Toby, M.P., had at the time of writing no knowledge of the subject beyond the definite statements quoted in the biographer's own words. He regrets that, accepting them in their ordinary sense, he received and conveyed an impression of Mr. Thomas's literary methods which turns out to have been erroneous." He is thus in the difficulty of having to admit a misstatement of fact in respect of which, to put it at the lowest, a question must arise for the jury whether the passage he relied upon justifies the statement. I think also that the learned judge could not have properly held that there was no evidence fit for the consideration of the jury as to some of the innuendoes averring imputations of discreditable motives. I am of opinion, therefore, that we could not direct judgment for the defendants without usurping the functions of the jury. Neither can we say that the evidence is so slight as to justify us in ordering a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence. A point was made by the defendants' counsel that the plaintiff had admitted that he did not rely upon evidence of malice outside that which was to be inferred from the article itself. Something to this effect certainly appears in the Times report, but it has not found its way into the judge's note, and the point of personal spite was forcibly put by the plaintiff's counsel throughout the whole case, which the judge refused to withdraw from the jury without any limitation as to any of the evidence given. I think, therefore, that we should not be justified in treating this answer as excluding all extrinsic evidence of malice from the discussion. Libel or no libel, I need hardly add, is pre-eminently a question for the jury where there is any evidence fit for their consideration.

BRADFIELD v. GUARDIANS OF CHELTENHAM UNION. (a.)

Local government—Guardian of the poor—Disqualification—County court administration order—Composition or arrangement with creditors—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 46 (1) (c).

A person who has made a request for and obtained an order in the county court under section 122 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the administration of his estate and payment of his debts by instalments, has "made a composition or arrangement with his creditors" within section 46 (1) of the Local Government Act, 1894, and has therefore become disqualified from holding the office of guardian of the poor.

Motion.

This was a motion to restrain the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff in the exercise of his office of guardian of the poor.

In March, 1904, the plaintiff, George Bradfield, was elected guardian of the poor for the North Ward of the Borough of Cheltenham.

In December, 1905, judgment having been previously obtained against him in the Cheltenham County Court, he preferred a request to the county court to make an order under section 122 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the administration of his estate and for the payment of his debts, stating that he proposed to pay his debts to the extent of 10s. in the £.

Upon such request the county court judge made an order under the above section for the payment of the plaintiff's debts as specified in the schedule to the request to the extent of 10s. in the £ by instalments of 8s. per month.

In February, 1906, the Board of Guardians passed a resolution that the plaintiff had become disqualified for holding the office of guardian, and that the office held by him was vacant.

Notice was posted to that effect, and an election was held in April at which another person was elected to the office.

The plaintiff brought the above action against the guardians of the North Ward, claiming a declaration that he was not disqualified for holding or exercising the office, and for an injunction to restrain the guardians from interfering with him in the exercise of the office, and now moved for an interim injunction to the like effect.

It was stated at the trial that this form of legal proceeding had been adopted as being that by which a judicial decision upon the question could be most speedly obtained.

Corrie Grant, for the plaintiff.—It is said that the plaintiff is disqualified under section 46 (1) (c) of the Local Government Act, 1894, on account of the order made by the county court for the administration of his estate upon the ground that he has, in the words of the section, "been adjudged bankrupt or made a composition or arrangement with his creditors." But he is not adjudged bankrupt: Lowe v. Lowrie, 18 Times L. Reps. 553. Nor has he compounded or arranged with his creditors. The composition mentioned in section 46 is a voluntary bargain between the debtor and his creditors, and not an order made by the court. A person is only disqualified by clear words in a statute. Disqualification will not be inferred: King v. Chitty, 5 Ad. & El. 609. Upon this principle a municipal councillor in Aslatt v. Corporation of Southampton, 29 W. R. 117, 16 Ch. D. 142, and a member of a local board of health in Queen v. Cooban, 18 Q. B. D. 269, 35 W. R. Dig. 124, were held not disqualified under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, and the Public Health Act, 1875, respectively. In his judgment, in Lowe v. Lowrie, Phillimore, J., expressed a doubt whether a debtor who had obtained a county court administration order had compounded with his creditors or not.

Macmorran, K.C., and C. Lacey Smith, for the defendants.—The words of the section are quite general, and cover all kinds of compositions: Corregan v. Allison, 64 J. P. 678. The doubt expressed by Phillimore, J., is not well-founded. The debtor put the law in motion for compelling his creditors to take a part of their debts and attained a discharge from the rest, and in that way he has made a composition with them as much as if he had called them together outside the authority of the court.

BUCKLEY, J.—The question for decision is whether the plaintiff under those circumstances is a person who has made a composition or arrangement with his creditors within the language of section 46 (1) (c) of the Local Government Act, 1894. Now, no doubt, in the words of Lord Denman in The King v. Chitty, 5 Ad. and El. 609, "The court would clearly not be justified in raising any inference of an intention to disqualify when such an intention is not expressed." I must look to see whether on the true construction of the Act the Act has provided that there shall be a disqualification in such a case as this. The clause to be construed is a penal clause, and therefore to be construed strictly, and the question is, Has the debtor made a composition? Now, when I come to look at section 122 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, I find that it is a section which enables the county court upon an application by the debtor to make an order providing for the administration of his estate and for the payment of his debts, "either in full or to such an extent as to the county court, under the circumstances of the case, appears practicable," and sub-section 7 provides that "the order shall be carried into effect in such manner as may be prescribed by general rules." Sub-section 13 provides that when the amount received under the order is sufficient to pay each creditor scheduled to the extent thereby provided and the costs of the administration, the order shall be superseded and the debtor shall be discharged from his debts to the scheduled creditors. Rules have been made under sub-section 7, the relevant rules being rules 2 and 3 of December, 1888. By Rule 2, "a debtor against whom a judgment has been obtained in a county court desiring to obtain an administration order under section 122 of the Act shall file" a certain "request and statement." By Rule 3, "the debtor shall state in his request whether he proposes to pay his creditors in full or whether he proposes to pay a composition." Then there are forms which are scheduled to the rules for the purpose of carrying them into effect. The machinery, therefore, is this—that the case being shown to be one falling within section 122, the debtor approaches the county court with the request that the court will make an order, the result of which will be that all his creditors will be bound to take, in this case, 10s. in the pound in satisfaction of their debts, and when that is done the debtor will be discharged from his debts to the scheduled creditors. Is a person who has availed himself of that machinery a person who has "made a composition or arrangement with his creditors"? It appears to me that he is. He could not make it without the concurrence of the court, I agree, but he is a person who avails himself of a certain statutory means of making a composition with his creditors, and he makes the composition by applying to a court of competent jurisdiction to make at his request an order which by force of the Act of Parliament will bind his creditors to take 10s. in the pound. Now I am not aware—counsel have not been able to show me—that anywhere in the Bankruptcy Act is "composition or arrangement with creditors" defined, and, even if it were, the language of the Local Government Act, 1894, is not, as was the language of the previous Act, addressed to compositions or arrangements under the Bankruptcy Act. There are no such words at all. The words of the Act of 1894 are simply that the debtor "has made a composition with his creditors," which I conceive are words that are wide enough to cover every composition, howsoever made, which the debtor has made with his creditors. It seems to me that when he approaches the county court under this section he applies the jurisdiction which enables the order to be made, and makes a composition with his creditors. The decision of the Divisional Court in Lowe v. Lowrie was not really a decision on the point which I have to decide; it was a decision on the words "adjudged bankrupt," and there is nothing in the words of my brother Phillimore at the end of his judgment which binds me on the matter which I have to decide. That matter was not before the court in that case, and did not arise for decision. I do not find anything in that decision which relieves me from the necessity of deciding that point for myself. I think that there was a composition here with the creditors, and that the plaintiff's action fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Motion dismissed.

In re THOMPSON, DECEASED. (a.)
THOMPSON v. THOMPSON.

Will—Power of appointment—Special power—Exercise by will—Remoteness.

A testator gave a life interest in his estate to his wife, and after her death he gave the estate to such of the children of his brother C. T. as his wife should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children of his brother and sister in equal shares after life estates to his brother and sister. The wife of the testator by her will appointed the estate to C. T. for life, and after his death to the children of C. T. who had attained or should attain twenty-five if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one if born after her death, or, being a female, had attained twenty-five if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one if born after her death, or should be previously married, and if more than one in equal shares. C. T. survived both the testator and his wife. All the children of C. T. were born in the lifetime of the testator's wife, and had attained twenty-five prior to her death, and one of them had attained twenty-five prior to the death of the testator.

Held, that the appointments were not void for remoteness, as the persons who would take under the will, and the shares they would take, would necessarily be ascertained and their shares vested, not later than twenty-one years from the death of C. T., who was alive at the death of the testator, the person by whose will the power was created.

Adjourned summons.

The testator, John Carby Thompson, by his will dated the 14th of May, 1872, appointed his wife, Mary Thompson, his brother Charles Thompson, and Frederick Craven to be the executors and trustees thereof; he devised and bequeathed his freehold messuage called Inholm and all his other real estate and all his personal estate not otherwise disposed of to his executors upon trust to pay the income thereof unto his wife during her life, and from and after her decease "upon such trusts for or for the benefit of all or any one or more exclusively of any others or other of the following persons—viz.: my said brother C. Thompson and his present wife M. A. Thompson and his present and future issue of whatever degree, and my sister Elizabeth Insull and her present and future issue of whatever degree, in such shares or proportions, if more than than one, and for such interest or interests, and at such time or times, and subject to such conditions, restrictions, and limitations over for the benefit of them or some or one of them, and with such powers of maintenance, education, and investment and management, and generally in such manner within the limits of remoteness allowed by law as my said wife M. Thompson by any deed or deeds with or without power of revocation and new appointment or by will or codicil shall appoint." In default of appointment, or so far as no such appointment should intend in trust to divide the capital into two portions, one of which should bear to the other the like proportion as the children or child living at his decease of his brother, Charles Thompson, should bear in number to the children or child living at his decease of his sister, Elizabeth Insull, and to stand possessed of the first portion in trust for his brother, C. Thompson, for life, and after his decease in trust for his wife, and after the death of the survivor upon trust for the children or child of C. Thompson living at his decease or born afterwards who had attained or should attain the age of twenty-one years in equal shares, and to stand possessed of the second portion in trust for Elizabeth Insull for life, and then in trust for her sons Charles Insull and Walter Horace Insull in equal shares, or, if only one should be living at his decease, then for such one alone.

The testator died on the 6th of July, 1872, and his will was duly proved by the executors. Charles Insull had predeceased him, having died on the 23rd of June, 1872.

Mary Thompson, the wife of the testator, by her will dated the 8th of July, 1879, appointed the income of the estate of her husband, the testator, over which she held the power of appointment, to Mary Ann Thompson, the wife of Charles Thompson, for her life for her separate use, and from and after the decease of Mary Ann Thompson "in trust for all and every the children or child of the said Charles Thompson who, being male, have attained or shall attain the age of twenty-five years if born in my lifetime, or twenty-one years if born after my decease, or, being female, have attained or shall attain the age of twenty-five years if born in my lifetime, or twenty-one years if born after my decease, or shall, being females, be previously married, and if more than one such child in equal shares."

The testatrix appointed £3,500 to Elizabeth Insull, and after her decease to Walter Horace Insull, and after his decease to his children on attaining twenty-one years. The testatrix also appointed £2,000 to each of the three daughters of Charles Thompson and £500 to each of the six sons of Charles Thompson who should be living at her decease and should attain the age of twenty-five years, or die under that age leaving issue. She also appointed £500 to Walter Horace Insull, son of Elizabeth Insull.

By a codicil dated the 1st of April, 1891, Mary Thompson revoked the appointment in her will in favour of Mary Ann Thompson, and appointed that the trustees should hold the investments in trust for Charles Thompson the elder during his life and after his death for such children or child of his as were in that behalf specified in the will.

Mary Thompson died on the 1st of February, 1893, and her will and codicil were proved by Charles Thompson and John Carby Thompson, two of the executors therein named.

Elizabeth Insull died on the 4th of May, 1882, and her son, Walter Horace Insull, died on the 13th of January, 1891, leaving his wife, Caroline Insull, who was one of the defendants in the present action, and nine children.

Mary Ann Thompson, the wife of Charles Thompson, died on the 8th of October, 1892.

By a deed dated the 29th of March, 1894, John Carby Thompson was appointed a trustee of the will of the testator jointly with Charles Thompson in the place of Mary Thompson, deceased, and Frederick Craven, who retired from the trust.

Charles Thompson died on the 17th of March, 1905. He was married once only—viz. to Mary Ann Thompson. He had nine children, six sons and three daughters, all of whom were born before the death of the testator, and all of whom survived the testator and had attained the age of twenty-five years before the death of Mary Thompson, the appointrix, one of whom also had attained the age of twenty-five years before the death of the testator, and all of whom were still living.

One son, Alfred Thompson, assigned his share under the testator's will to the defendants, John Watkinson and Samuel Watkinson, together with George Watkinson, as tenants in common.

George Watkinson died on the 30th of August, 1905, having by his will appointed the defendants,

(a.) Reported by R. FRANKLIN STUBBING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

George Watkinson and Samuel Lord Watkinson, to be the executors thereof.

Another son, Arthur Henry Thompson, also assigned his share in the estate of the testator to George Watkinson and the defendants John Watkinson and Samuel Watkinson, as joint tenants.

Another son, Walter Thompson, was adjudicated bankrupt on the 23rd of February, 1897, and the defendant, A. H. Wildy, became the trustee in his bankruptcy.

This summons was taken out by J. C. Thompson, the surviving trustee of the will of the testator, for the determination of the question whether the appointments contained in the will of Mary Thompson to all and every the children or child of Charles Thompson, who, being a male, had attained or should attain the age of twenty-five years if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one years if born after her decease; or, being a female, had attained or should attain the age of twenty-five years, if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one years if born after her decease, or should, being a female, be previously married, and if more than one such child in equal shares were good appointments under the power given to her by the will of the testator, J. C. Thompson, deceased, in favour of any and which of the children of Charles Thompson, or whether such appointments were void under the rules against perpetuity.

Kenneth Wood, for the trustee of the will of the testator.

Younger, K.C., and G. Henderson, for two sons of Charles Thompson.—In the events which have happened, and which were definitely ascertained at the death of the testator, there was no possibility that the rule against perpetuity could have been infringed. At the death of the appointrix all the children of Charles Thompson had attained twenty-five, and the only persons to whom she appointed shares were the children of Charles Thompson living at her death who should attain twenty-five and to any children born after her death who should attain twenty-one. The question was what words must be read into the original will. It ought to be read with reference to the existing facts. In Picken v. Matthews, 10 Ch. D. 264, a gift which on the face of the will might be bad was held to be good having regard to the existing facts: see also In re Barker, Caper v. Flick, 92 L. T. 831. In the present case the class was closed in any event at the death of the appointrix, no one outside the class could come in afterwards. That period was within the legal limits, and therefore the appointment was good. The appointment must be read as if it ran: "I appoint in trust for all the children of Charles Thompson living at my death or for such of them born afterwards who shall attain twenty-one." That appointment, taken with reference to the facts, was good. The testator's will ought to be read, having regard to the facts, and to the exercise of the power of appointment, as if the following words were in it: "I give to my widow for life and upon her death to my brother Charles for life, and upon his death to his children living at my death who shall attain twenty-five years with remainder to the children born afterwards who shall attain twenty-one years." That class would have been a good class and such a gift in the testator's will would have been a perfectly good gift. The appointrix had appointed to these persons, and to no others, and therefore the rule against perpetuities had been entirely complied with. The exercise of a power of appointment of this kind might be good or bad according to the facts: see Picken v. Matthews. The facts that existed at the death of the appointrix must be read into the will creating the power, and if, on those facts, the will did not infringe the rule against perpetuities, the appointment was good, but if the will read in that manner did infringe the rule, the appointment was bad. As the children were all living at the death of the appointrix, they constituted a class that came within the rule. The principle laid down in Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, 30 Ch. D. 172, was good, but it might be doubted whether the decision was good, because it was based upon the case of Wilkinson v. Duncan, 9 W. R. 915, 30 Beav. 111, where the gift was not to a class at all. That case could not be supported unless the facts that existed at the testator's death were looked at. [JOYCE, J., referred to Gray on Perpetuities, as approving that decision.] In Badham v. Mee, 1 Myl. & K. 32, Sir J. Leach, M.R., said that the Court of Common Pleas decided against the validity of the appointment upon the ground that by the execution of a power no estate could be created which would not have been valid if limited in the deed creating the power. The exercise of the power of appointment must be read into the will not in accordance with the words, but in accordance with the facts.

G. Lawrence, for the three daughters of Charles Thompson.

Felix Cassell, for the four Watkinsons, who were defendants.—The rule is laid down as stated by Mr. Younger in In re Coulman, Munby v. Ross, 30 Ch. D. 186, 34 W. R. Dig. 137. The validity of the appointment had to be determined by the state of things that existed when the appointment took effect, and not as they existed at the death of the testator who created the power.

Hughes, K.C., and Dighton Pollock, for those who took in default of appointment.—This appointment was not good, as it infringed the rules against perpetuities. The appointment in Mary Thompson's will would have to be read into the testator's will. If so read, it was in effect a gift to Mary Thompson for life, then to Charles Thompson for life, and then to the children of Charles Thompson born in his lifetime who should attain the age of twenty-five years. Unless subsequent events were taken into consideration that gift would be bad. The class was not closed until the death of the survivor of the two life tenants. There was no case in which it was laid down that the appointment could only be read into the testator's will together with the surrounding circumstances. Picken v. Matthews was not a case of the exercise of a power of appointment at all. In that case there was a gift of real and personal property to the children of a daughter who should attain the age of twenty-five years, and therefore the class would necessarily close and be ascertained at the date of the testator's death, and there could be no possibility of the gift being void for remoteness. Several points were argued in Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm. The decision for which it has been cited was dismissed in a very summary manner. It was not really argued, otherwise it would have been pointed out that Wilkinson v. Duncan did not support the proposition for which it was cited. In fact that case rather supported the view now contended for. There the gift was to each daughter and not to the daughters as a class, and therefore they could be easily ascertained. The gifts in the present case were the same as the gifts to the sons in Wilkinson v. Duncan, where the direction to pay the residue "between his sons equally as when they should respectively attain twenty-four years of age" was held void for remoteness. In order to ascertain whether the rule against perpetuities had been infringed the possible events must be looked at and not merely the actual events: Pearks v. Moseley, 29 W. R. 1, 5 App. Cas. 714. If the rule against perpetuities was infringed by the testator's will, when the exercise of the appointment was read into it, that could not be rectified by looking at the surrounding circumstances. In the case of In re Hallinan's Trusts, [1904], 1 I. R. 452, there was no gift to a class at all but only a gift to one, and the proposition that there was a good exercise of the power was carefully limited to cases where the power was exercised in favour of a person named or described.

Younger, K.C., in reply.—The estates that are created by the power must be looked at and not the words creating the power. In re Hallinan's Trusts. The test of the validity of the estates raised is to place them in the deed creating the power in lieu of the power itself: Sugden on Powers (8th ed., p. 396), Farwell on Powers (2nd ed., p. 286). In one sense the validity is decided by referring to the event. The case of Peard v. Kekewich, 15 Beav. 166, bears out the same proposition.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 29.—JOYCE, J.—Upon consideration this appears to be a tolerably plain case and free from difficulty.

The rule against perpetuities requires that every estate or interest must vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after the determination of some life in being at the time of the creation of such estate or interest, and not only must the person to take be ascertained, but the amount of his interest must be ascertainable within the prescribed period. Or the rule may be stated thus: "A limitation of any estate or interest, to take effect in possession or enjoyment at a future time, and which is not, from the time of its creation, a vested estate or interest, will be void, ab initio, if, at the time when the limitation takes effect, there is a possibility that the estate or interest limited will not vest within the period of a life or lives then in being, or within a further period of twenty-one years thereafter."

In the case of a will disposing of the testator's own property or exercising a general power of appointment, the rule requires that the estates or interests limited should vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after limitation of a life in being at the death of the testator. As to estates or interests vesting immediately upon the testator's death, there is of course no question of remoteness. Where, as in the present case, the will under consideration is made in exercise of a special power of appointment, the question whether an estate or interest appointed by it be too remote depends upon its distance from the creation, not from the exercise of the power. In other words, the period within which estates and interests limited by the appointment made in exercise of a special power must vest does not begin from the death of the person exercising the power, but, if such power was created by a will, from the death of the original testator. In the case of a will made in exercise of a special power of appointment, as to any estates or interests given which vest immediately upon the testator's death, or must vest within twenty-one years afterwards if the testator, the donee of the power, was living at the time of its creation, there is no objection on the ground of remoteness, since what is given must vest immediately upon or within twenty-one years after the termination of a life (that of the donee of the power) which was in existence at the time of the creation of the power. In the case of a power to appoint by will to issue, however remote, if the donee of the power was alive at the time of its creation any appointment to objects of the power, specified by name or otherwise, but capable at the death of the donee of the power of being ascertained immediately, must be unobjectionable, notwithstanding that neither the appointees nor their parents nor their grandparents were alive at the time of the creation of the power. For the interests of the appointees vest at the appointor's death, and the appointees were living when the power was created. But if future estates or interests be given by the will of the donee of the power, the question may arise whether such estates or interests are, or are not, within the limits allowed by the rule, which requires them to vest not later than twenty-one years after the termination of some life in being at the time of the creation of the power.

The present case is that of an appointment by will in exercise of a special power created by the will of John C. Thompson, so that the date of the creation of the power was the death of this testator, which occurred in the year 1872. Mary Thompson, the donee of the power, was then living; consequently, as to any gift by her will exercising the power that vested immediately upon her death, no question of remoteness arises whether such gift was to persons by name or to persons capable of being definitely ascertained at once, provided that the amount of their shares was also ascertainable within the prescribed period. Again, an appointment by her will to the children that attain twenty-one or previously marry of any person (e.g. Charles Thompson) who was living at the death of John C. Thompson, the original testator, is obviously unobjectionable. What the testatrix did do was to appoint (after a preceding life estate which vested immediately) to a composite class comprising the children of Charles Thompson born in her lifetime that attained twenty-five, or being females previously married, and the children of Charles Thompson born after her decease that attained twenty-one, or being females previously married. Now the children of Charles Thompson born in the lifetime of the testatrix were of course ascertained at her death. As a matter of fact all such children had previously fulfilled the condition of attaining twenty-five. Consequently, each of them, upon the death of the testatrix, took an immediate vested interest in some share of the appointed property, the amount of which share would necessarily be determined not later than twenty-one years after the death of their father, Charles Thompson, who was living at the time of the creation of the power. For within that period all his children that lived to attain twenty-one, in particular those (if any) born after the death of the testatrix, Mary Thompson, must have been of age. In point of fact, however, there were no such children born after the death of the testatrix. If the appointment made after the preceding vested life interest had been simply to the children of Charles Thompson born after the decease of the testatrix who should attain twenty-one, or, being females, previously marry, it is plain that this would have been perfectly valid, for Charles Thompson was alive at the time of the creation of the power. Again, if the appointment after the preceding life estate had been simply to the children of Charles Thompson born in the testatrix's lifetime who attained or should attain twenty-five, then it appearing, as was the fact, that the class of these children was closed and the members of such class definitely ascertained in her lifetime, the case would have been merely one of an immediate vested gift taking effect upon the death of the donee of the power, who was living at the time of its creation, to persons definitely ascertained. Manifestly this would have been free from all objection on the ground of remoteness. The addition to the last mentioned class of such (if any) children of Charles Thompson as might be born after the decease of the testatrix and attain twenty-one or being females previously married, made no material difference with respect to the validity of the gift, since all these other children, if any, would necessarily be ascertained, as also, therefore, the amount of the share of each member of the composite class, not later than the expiration of twenty-one years from the termination of the life of Charles Thompson, their father, who was living at the death of the original testator whose will created the power. The result is that immediately upon the appointment by the will of Mary Thompson coming into force, that is to say, at her decease, it was absolutely certain that, within the prescribed period of a life or lives in being at the creation of the power and twenty-one years, not only would the persons to take be ascertained, but their interests would be vested, and the amount or number of their aliquot shares be definitely fixed. In other words, the appointments contained in the will of Mary Thompson are good appointments under the power given to her by the will of the testator, John Carby Thompson.

In the course of the arguments before me some doubt was suggested as to the authority of the decision of Pearson, J., in Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, 30 Ch. D. 172. I mean, of course, that part of the decision which had reference to the question of remoteness. Professor Gray, in his most excellent treatise on The Rule against Perpetuities (2nd ed.), sections 523*c* and 523*d*, treats the decision as correct. I do not entertain the slighest doubt that it is so. It has been followed in Ireland in In re Hallinan's Trusts, [1904] 1 I. R. 452, affirmed on appeal.

When Mr. Jarman, in vol. 1 of his book on Wills (5th ed), at p. 259, states that the test by which the validity of such a gift as that which I have had to consider must be tried is to read it as inserted in the deed or will creating the power in the place of the power, that does not mean that the precise language of the instrument exercising the power (in the present case the will of Mary Thompson) is to be read into the instrument creating it—viz. the will of J. C. Thompson (Gray, section 515 and seq.). The will of Mary Thompson was an ambulatory document, having no force or effect whatever until her death: see the judgment of Lord Davey in Beddington v. Baumann, 51 W. R., at p. 385, [1903] App. Cas., at p. 19. Inasmuch, therefore, as the appointment made by the will of Mary Thompson was so made that the persons who according to the true construction of such will were to take under it and the shares they were to take would necessarily be ascertained, and their interests vest not later than the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of Charles Thompson, who was alive at the death of the testator, by whose will the power was created, the appointment made by the will of Mary Thompson was perfectly valid: see the judgment of Kindersley, V.C., in Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew, at p. 137.

WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Metropolis—Thames—Sewers—District sewer constructed by vestry with consent of the Sewer Commissioners draining houses directly into the Thames—Notice to discontinue drainage—Houses connected up with main drainage system — Expenses — Liability — Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 135—Amending Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 104), s. 1.

At the time of the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a group of houses in London near the Thames were drained into the river by means of a drain constructed with the consent of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers. In 1903 the Thames Conservancy gave notice requiring the plaintiffs, who were the successors of the vestry, to discontinue the passage of sewage into the Thames from this drain, and it was agreed by the plaintiffs and the defendants that the only practical mode of complying with the notice was to bring the sewage into the metropolitan main drainage sewer in the neighbouring street. The necessary work was then done by the plaintiffs, and the action was brought to decide whether they or the London County Council, as the successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works, should bear the expense.

Held, that as the London County Council were not under any legal obligation to provide means of preventing the sewage of houses from passing into the river, the declaration of their liability asked for by the plaintiffs for the expenses of constructing the new sewer must be refused.

Special case.

In the action the plaintiff claimed a declaration that the defendants were liable to commence and complete the necessary sewers and works for preventing, as far as possible, the sewage of the houses Nos. 102, 103, and 104, Grosvenor-road, and of All Saints' Church from passing into the Thames within the Metropolis, and also to recover £627 4s. as money paid by the plaintiffs for and at the request of the defendants.

The special case, so far as material to the judgment, was as follows:

In May, 1849, some time after Grosvenor-road, with the embankment on one side thereof abutting on the Thames, was constructed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the Commissioners of Sewers consented to the construction of a drain from Nos. 1, 2, 3, Erin-place, afterwards known as Nos. 102, 103, and 104, Grosvenor-road, into the Thames on the application of a builder on behalf of the then owner of the houses.

The drain was made, and from that date down to the completion of the works now in question, the sewage from the houses discharged into the Thames.

It is to be taken that the said drain was, at the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a drain for draining a group of houses by a combined operation laid before the 1st of January, 1856, with the sanction and approval of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers.

About 1870, All Saint's Church, near 104, Grosvenor-road, was built, and at some time subsequently a drain from the church was connected with the drain from the houses, by means of which the sewage from the church discharged into the Thames.

It cannot be stated whether the drain from the church and its connection with the pipe leading from the manhole into the river was constructed with or without the knowledge or consent of the vestry of St. George, Hanover-square.

The Grosvenor-road houses and the church are within the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, and under the London Government Act of 1899 the powers and duties of the elective vestry of that parish were transferred to, and are now vested in, the Westminster City Council. The sewage from the houses and church passed into the river through a flap, which opened at low tide, but at high tide was closed by the pressure of the water. Before 1899 the vestry of St. George, Hanover-square, and after 1899 the Westminster City Council, took steps to ensure the efficient working of the said flap. With that exception the Westminster City Council has done no acts of interference with or control over the drainage of the said houses. Having regard to the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, it is admitted that the only practicable mode of disposing of sewage from the houses and church was to bring such sewage into the metropolitan main drainage, system at the Lupus-street sewer.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In July, 1895, the court decided that the London County Council had no power to order the vestry of St. George, Hanover-square, to construct a sewer to commence opposite No. 102, Grosvenor-road and terminate in Lupus-street at the low-level sewer belonging to the County Council.

In October, 1903, the Conservators of the Thames gave notice requiring the Westminster City Council to discontinue within three months the passage of sewage into the Thames from the sewer taking the drainage of the Grosvenor-road houses. In consequence of that notice the Westminster City Council ceased their practice of seeing to the effectual working of the aforesaid flap opening into the Thames.

In June, 1904, during proceedings by the owners of the houses against the Westminster City Council for ceasing to maintain the proper working of the flap, both parties concurred in stating that a sewer must be constructed for carrying off the drainage, and by consent the proceedings stood over to give the Westminster City Council an opportunity of arranging with the London County Council for the immediate construction of such a sewer, leaving the question of the cost of such sewer to be determined later between the said last-mentioned parties.

The Westminster City Council have since had constructed a sewer, which carries the sewage from the said houses and church into the Rutland-street sewer, and have paid £627 4s., the cost of these works. The question was whether the London County Council were under a legal liability to provide means of preventing the sewage of the houses and church from passing into the Thames within the metropolis, as if that was the case the sum paid is to be taken to have been paid for the defendants at the defendants' request.

The Westminster City Council contend that the duty and obligation of doing the said works is by statute imposed on the county council.

The London County Council contend that on the facts and in the circumstances above stated they were under no obligation to provide means of carrying the drainage either of the houses or of the church into one of the City of Westminster sewers communicating with the metropolitan main drainage system, or otherwise into that system, and that in any case it had a discretion in the matter.

Cur. adv. vult.

BRAY, J., read his judgment as follows: This is a special case stated in an action by the Mayor, &c., of the City of Westminster against the London County Council, and the question I have to decide is stated in paragraph 19 of the case—viz. whether the London County Council was under a legal liability to provide means of preventing the sewage of certain houses in Grosvenor-road and All Saints' Church from passing into the River Thames. The plaintiffs allege that this liability is created by section 135 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, or by section 1 of the Amendment Act of 1858. Previous to the passing of the Act of 1855 two bodies, the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London and the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, had constructed certain main sewers, the sewage from many of which passed directly into the Thames. The Metropolitan Board of Works was created by section 135 of the Act of 1855, and by the same section the main sewers before mentioned were vested in them. The section then proceeded as follows: "Such Board shall make such sewers and works as they may think necessary for preventing all or any part of the sewage within the metropolis from flowing or passing into the River Thames in or near the metropolis." At the time of the passing of the Act the sewage from the houses now known as 102, 103, and 104, Grosvenor-road, was passing directly into the Thames by a drain made with the consent of the Commissioners of Sewers, and the contention is that the Metropolitan Board of Works should have constructed a main or intercepting sewer to take this sewage, and as they did not do so, but carried their intercepting sewer along Lupus-street instead of along Grosvenor-road, that they, or, rather, their successors, the London County Council, can now be compelled to construct a main sewer to prevent this sewage from passing into the Thames. In my opinion section 135 did not compel the board to lay a main sewer to intercept this sewage. The section states "such sewers and works as they may may think necessary"—that is to say, it was for them to decide what sewers and works were necessary. They did in 1869 lay in Lupus-street a sewer sufficiently low to take this sewage by means of a sewer along what was afterwards known as Rutland-street, and they might in their discretion think such a sewer as the low-level Lupus-street sewer was all that was necessary. It was for the vestries and district boards under section 69 to make the necessary sewers for effectually draining their parishes or districts, and the Metropolitan Board of Works was not, in my opinion, bound to lay a main sewer so as to intercept the drain of every house that drained into the Thames. More reliance, however, was placed on section 1 of the Act of 1858: "The Metropolitan Board shall cause to be commenced as soon as may be after the passing of this Act, and to be carried on and completed with all convenient speed according to such plan as to them may seem proper, the necessary sewers and works for the improvement of the main drainage of the metropolis and for preventing as far as may be practicable the sewage of the metropolis from passing into the River Thames within the metropolis." It does not contain the words "as they may think necessary," but "according to such plan as to them may seem proper," and later "as far as may be practicable." It was not in my opinion intended by this section to take away from the board the discretion they formerly had. The object of the statute appears from the preamble—viz., that the works which the board had been authorized to carry out by the Act of 1855 should be speedily undertaken and completed, and I think the "necessary sewers and works" in section 10 only meant the same necessary sewers and works as had been mentioned in section 135 of the Act of 1855—viz., such as the board might think necessary. To give the Act any other construction would oblige the board to construct many sewers which would be properly district sewers, and not main sewers, and sufficient in number and extent to take the sewage of every house that at that time drained into the Thames. I am satisfied that was not intended, and in my opinion the words of the section do not compel me to adopt such a construction. There must, therefore, be judgment for the defendants in the action with costs.

Power of attorney—Power coupled with an interest—Revocation—Manager—Evidence—Additional consideration to that expressed in document—Specific performance.

Where a power of attorney was given by the owners of an estate to an agent to enter into possession and to manage the estate, to receive the rents and profits and to pay the debts of the owners, and possession was taken by the agent, and some time afterwards the power of attorney revoked and possession demanded,

Held, that the power of attorney was revocable, although the agent had, with the consent of one of the owners, given a personal guarantee to the mortgagee of the estate to pay the mortgage debt on the day of redemption, and (even if the authority were irrevocable) the owners were entitled to recover possession of the property.

These appeals arose out of an action of ejectment under circumstances which are set out at length in their lordships' judgment.

The question as to when a power of attorney is revocable when the donee of the power has an interest was considered, and in this particular case adjudicated upon.

Martelli, for the appellant.

Whinney, for the respondent.

The judgment of their lordships (Earl of HALSBURY, Lords DAVEY, ROBERTSON, ATKINSON, and Sir ARTHUR WILSON) was delivered by Lord ATKINSON.—The action out of which these appeals have arisen was one of ejectment, brought to recover possession of an estate called "the J. J. Frith Estate" situate at Cockburn Harbour, South Caicos, in the Turks and Caicos Islands. The plaintiff (the present respondent) sued as attorney for Elizabeth Ann Frith, the widow and executrix of J. J. Frith, deceased, the former owner, under whose will she (the widow) was tenant for life of the estate, her two sons being tenants in common in remainder. The defendant (the present appellant) had been appointed attorney over the estate by two deeds, dated respectively the 12th of March, 1902, and the 18th of October, 1902, executed by the executrix and her said two sons, and authorizing him to enter into possession of and manage the estate, to receive the rents and profits thereof, and thereout, after providing for the expenses of management, pay the debts due by the owners of the estate. In the month of May, 1902, the appellant entered into possession as such attorney. In the month of September, 1903, notice was served upon him by the widow and the sons purporting to revoke his appointment. Shortly afterwards possession was demanded from him on behalf of the widow, but was refused by him on the ground that owing to a personal guarantee that he, with the widow's consent, had given to one W. B. Astwood, a mortgagee of the estate, to pay the mortgage debt on the day of redemption, his authority was coupled with an interest and was, therefore, irrevocable. The deeds of the 12th of March and the 18th of October, 1902, do not contain any reference to this guarantee or to the mortgage debt, and did not create any charge or lien in favour of Astwood or any other creditor of the owners of the estate, or form part of Astwood's security. And though by the payment of the latter's debt the special interest which was to keep alive the appellant's authority would have ceased to exist, his continuance in his post is not made to depend in any way on that event. It was alleged that the appellant had before the 12th of March, 1902, the date of the first deed, given security to another creditor, Messrs. Middleton & Co., of New York, but inasmuch as before it was attempted to revoke the appellant's authority, and necessarily before possession was demanded, the full amount due to this firm had been tendered to them, it was conceded in argument that nothing turned upon this transaction, and that as far as these appeals are concerned it might be dismissed from consideration.

At the trial, which took place before St. Aubyn, J., and a special jury of the island, there was no substantial conflict of evidence. The main facts of the case were in effect admitted. The appellant, however, tendered evidence to show that the deed of the 18th of October, 1902, did not disclose the entire consideration given for it, and that additional consideration for it had moved from the appellant, namely, the above-mentioned personal guarantee given by him to Astwood with the approval of the widow, without which it was clearly established that Astwood would not have advanced the money. The learned judge at first, apparently, thought this evidence was inadmissible on the ground that it would contradict the deed; but subsequently he admitted it. At the close of the defendant's case he expressed the opinion that the main question at issue—namely, whether the power of attorney were revocable or not—was purely a question of law for his own decision; but at the instance of the appellant's advocate he submitted to the jury eight somewhat involved and complicated questions. Of these three only—namely, Nos. 2, 3, and 8, seem to be of any importance. The answers to these appear when taken together to amount, in effect, to a finding that there was consideration for the deed of the 18th of October, 1902, other than, and additional to, that mentioned in it—namely, the agreement between the widow and the appellant that the latter should give to Astwood the above mentioned personal guarantee, as he subsequently did.

On these findings the appellant's advocate moved for judgment, but St. Aubyn, J., on the 3rd of December, 1903, delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court in favour of respondent, holding that the parol evidence tendered to prove the additional consideration was inadmissible on the ground that it contradicted the deed, and that the authority given to the appellant as attorney was revocable.

From this decision the appellant appealed to the Court of Error of the Islands. That tribunal held that the appellant had not taken the necessary steps to bring his appeal before them; that the appeal was in fact not properly before them at all; and they dismissed it with costs. From this decision the appellant obtained leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council in the usual way. The record of the proceedings does not show what were the particular rules of practice which the appellant was considered to have violated or failed to observe, and as the proceedings of the Court of Error appear to have been somewhat irregular, special leave was given to the appellant to appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court direct to his Majesty in Council, in addition to the leave to appeal obtained by him from the Court of Error itself.

The appellant's counsel on the hearing of these appeals contended in effect:

(1) That St. Aubyn, J., was wrong in holding that the parol evidence of the additional consideration was inadmissible.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(2) That the authority given to the appellant by the two instruments of the 12th of March and the 18th of October, 1902, was, having regard to the findings of the jury in reference to the guarantee, an authority coupled with an interest and therefore irrevocable.

(3) That the attempt to revoke the authority and to dismiss and dispossess the appellant before the seven years for which he was appointed had expired was so inequitable that the respondent should be restrained by injunction from carrying it out, and that therefore the appellant had a good equitable defence to the ejectment.

These are, in effect, the questions for their lordships' decision.

In support of the first contention the case of Clifford v. Turrell, 1 Y. & C. 138, which was a suit for specific performance, was cited.

The plaintiff in that case was the lessee of a farm the stock and farming implements upon which had at the suit of the defendant been taken in execution. The plaintiff, with the consent of the sheriff, executed a deed by which he purported to assign to the defendant, for a money consideration exceeding the amount of the execution, the chattels seized, and, it was contended, his interest in the leasehold. Parol evidence was admitted to prove that additional consideration was in fact given for the deed by which the plaintiff was induced to execute it—namely, an agreement by the defendant that he would pay to the plaintiff an annuity of £40 per annum during his life and give to him a house worth £10 a year to live in. Specific performance of that parol agreement was decreed. The Vice-Chancellor (Sir L Shadwell) in delivering judgment in the case, lays down, in the opinion of their lordships correctly, the rule of law upon this subject. He said:

"Rules of law may exclude parol evidence where a written instrument stands in competition with it, but it has long been settled that it is not within any rule of this nature to adduce evidence of a consideration additional to what is stated in a written instrument." And then adds: "The rule is, that where there is one consideration stated in the deed, you may prove any other consideration which existed, not in contradiction to the instrument; and it is not in contradiction to the instrument to prove a larger consideration than that which is stated."

Their lordships think the present case comes within the rule, that the evidence proposed to be given did not contradict the deed, and that the appellant's first contention is well founded.

In reference to the second point, it cannot be disputed that the general rule of law is that employment of the general character of the appellant's in this case can be terminated at the will of the employer. The proper conduct of the affairs of life necessitates that this should be so. The exception to this rule within which the appellant must bring himself, if he is to succeed, is that where "an agreement is entered into for sufficient consideration, and either forms part of a security, or is given for the purpose of securing some benefit to the donee of the authority, such authority is irrevocable": Storey on Agency, p. 476.

It cannot be contended that the ordinary case of an agent or manager employed for pecuniary reward in the shape of a fixed salary comes within this exception, though his employment confers a benefit upon him. And their lordships are of opinion that the position of the appellant under the instruments appointing him attorney over this estate is in law that of an ordinary agent or manager employed at a salary, and nothing more, because the authority which was conferred upon him contains no reference to the special interest in the occupation of his post which his guarantee to Astwood might have given him, was not expressed or intended to be used for the purpose of subserving that interest, and has no connection with it. For these reasons their lordships think that the authority given to the appellant was revocable. Several cases have been cited by the appellant's counsel in support of his second contention. On an examination of them it will be found that the essential distinction between this case and those cited is this, that in each of the latter power and authority were given to a particular individual to do a particular thing, the doing of which conferred a benefit upon him, the authority ceasing when the benefit was reaped, while in this case, as already pointed out, nothing of that kind was ever provided for or contemplated. In Carmichael's case, [1896] 2 Ch. 643, the donor of the power, for valuable consideration, conferred upon the donee authority to do a particular thing in which the latter had an interest—namely, to apply for the shares of the company which the donee was promoting for the purpose of purchasing his own property from him, and the donor sought to revoke that authority before the benefit was reaped. In Spooner v. Sandilands, 1 Y. & C. 390, the donor charged his lands with certain debts due and to accrue due to the donees, and put the latter into the possession of those lands and into receipt of the rents and profits of them, for the express purpose of enabling the donees to discharge thereout these same debts; and it was sought to eject the donees before their debts were paid. In Clerk v. Laurie, 5 W. R. 629, 2 H. & N. 199, a wife pledged to a bank dividends to which she was entitled to secure advances made to her husband. It was held that while the advances remained unpaid she could not revoke the bank's authority to receive the dividends. In Smart v. Sandars, 5 C. B. 895, it was decided that the general authority of a factor in whose hands goods were placed for sale, to sell at the best price which could reasonably be obtained, could not be revoked after the factor had made advances on the security of the goods to the owner of them, and while these advances remained unpaid. It is not necessary for the purposes of these appeals that their lordships should determine whether or not the appellant has, on the authority of Read v. Anderson, 32 W. R. 950, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 779, and Turner v. Goldsmith, 39 W. R. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544, a right of action against the respondent for damages for breach of agreement. However that may be, it is clear, their lordships think, that even if the authority conferred upon the appellant had been irrevocable, he has not a good equitable defence to the action of ejectment, inasmuch as the contract made with him, being one entire thing incapable of being divided into independent parts, he would not, upon the authorities cited, be entitled to an injunction to restrain the respondent from suing in ejectment. That is, as the appellant's counsel admits, the test. A suit for such an injunction would, in this case, amount in effect to a suit for specific performance of a contract for hiring and service, a suit which cannot be maintained. In Ogden v. Fossick, 4 De G. F. & J. 426, the suit was instituted for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease of a coal wharf. The agreement contained a provision that the plaintiff should, during the term, be appointed manager of the coal wharf at a specified salary. It was held by the Lords Justices that the two parts of the agreement were inseparably connected, and as a decree for specific performance of the contract for personal service could not be granted, the suit must be dismissed. In Stocker v. Brockelbank, 20 L. J. Ch.

401, the plaintiff, who was entitled to certain letters patent, by deed granted to the defendant for a money consideration an exclusive licence to use the patent, and by the same deed covenanted with the plaintiff that he (the plaintiff) should act as manager of the defendant's works for the same period. The plaintiff was dismissed. He thereupon filed a bill claiming to be a partner in the business, and praying that the defendant might be restrained from excluding him from the works. In delivering judgment the Lord Chancellor (Lord Truro) said:

"I therefore am clearly of opinion that . . . there was no partnership, that it was simply a contract of hiring and of service, the remuneration to be measured with reference to the amount of the profits of the business. If that be so, is there any instance . . . where it has been supposed that a contract of hiring and service could be made the subject of an application to this court if the employer claimed . . . to dismiss his servant, or his manager, or by whatever name the party to perform the service is to be denominated? I do not recollect any instance of any attempt on the part of a court of equity to compel the employer to retain the servant, agent, or manager, and not to forbear to leave him to his remedy at law for the breach of it."

Their lordships are accordingly of opinion that the appellant's third contention, like his second, cannot be sustained, and that the appellant is not entitled to withhold from the executrix the possession of the lands which he obtained as her and her sons' attorney or agent.

Their lordships will therefore humbly advise his Majesty that both these appeals should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of them.

(Collins, M.R., and Vaughan Williams, Romer, Cozens-Hardy, Moulton, and Farwell, L.JJ.) July 31.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN CROASDELL AND CAMMELL, LAIRD, & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Interlocutory or final order—Motion to set aside award—Ord. 58, rr. 3, 15.

An award of an arbitrator was stated in the form of a special case. Before the special case came on for hearing, the Divisional Court, upon the application of one of the parties, set the award aside upon the ground of some technical misconduct on the part of the arbitrator. Upon appeal from the order of the Divisional Court, Held, that the order was an interlocutory and not a final order, and the appeal ought therefore to be entered in the interlocutory list.

Application to transfer an appeal from the final to the interlocutory list.

A contract in writing between Croasdell and Cammell, Laird, & Co. contained a clause that all disputes arising under the contract should be referred to arbitration. Disputes having arisen under the contract, an arbitrator was appointed, and he made his award in the form of a special case, which was set down for hearing.

Before the special case came on to be heard, Cammell, Laird, & Co. moved to set the award aside upon the ground of some objection to the conduct of the arbitrator amounting to technical misconduct on his part.

The Divisional Court ordered "that the award of" the arbitrator "made by him in the form of a special case . . . be set aside with costs."

Croasdell served notice of appeal as from an interlocutory order, but the officer in charge of the list entered the appeal in the final list as being an appeal from a final order.

C. A. Russell, K.C. (Shepherd Little with him), for Croasdell.—The order of the Divisional Court is an interlocutory and not a final order. The latest test is that laid down by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., in Bozson v. Altrincham Urban Council, 51 W. R. 337, [1903] 1 K. B. 547, in the Court of Appeal—namely, whether the judgment or order, as made, finally disposes of the rights of the parties. That was the test laid down by Jessel, M.R., in delivering the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Stockton Iron Furnace Co., 27 W. R. 433, 10 Ch. D. 335. In Bozson v. Altrincham Urban Council the court refused to follow the test laid down in Salaman v. Warner, 39 W. R. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 734—namely, that an order is not final unless it is one made on such an application or proceeding that, for whichever side the decision is given, it will, if it stands, finally determine the matter in litigation. In the present case the order does not determine the rights of the parties. The court has to ascertain what is the real matter in litigation, and see whether the rights of the parties as to it have been determined. The real matter in litigation here relates to the rights of the parties under the contract. There has been no determination as to those rights, and they are left undetermined by the order setting aside the award. In In re Delagoa Bay Railway and Tancred, 37 W. R. 578, this court held that an appeal from a refusal to set aside an award or remit it to the umpire for consideration is analogous to an application for a new trial, and ought to be set down in the interlocutory and not in the final list of appeals. That decision covers the present case, and as it has stood for seventeen years it ought not to be disturbed.

Standard Discount Co. v. Otard de la Grange, 26 W. R. 25, 3 C. P. D. 67; Collins v. Paddington Vestry, 28 W. R. 588, 5 Q. B. D. 368; Sherbrook v. Tufnell, 30 W. R. 740, 9 Q. B. D. 621; and In re Reeves & Co., 50 W. R. 252, [1902] 1 Ch. 29, were also referred to.

A. J. Ashton, for Cammell, Laird, & Co.—The test is whether the particular litigation before the court has been brought to an end by the order appealed against. The lis here is the reference of the disputes to the particular arbitrator, and that has come to a final conclusion by the order of the Divisional Court. If the other party desires to have those disputes settled under the arbitration clause in the contract, he must begin his proceedings de novo. The rights of the parties in that particular lis have been finally disposed of, and therefore the order is a final order.

C. A. Russell, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—In the view which we take of this matter it is not necessary to go through all the decisions which have been cited to us with the view of showing what is the proper general principle upon which the court ought to act. In any view we may take of that matter we must in the end decide the particular case before us, and I prefer in this instance merely to decide the particular case for the reasons which I will give later on.

The particular order from which the appeal is brought is one made upon an application to set aside an award of an arbitrator upon the ground of some technical objection to his conduct, or upon the ground of some excess of jurisdiction. The arbitrator stated his award in the form of a special case. The result of the application to the Divisional Court was that the award was set aside. That order of the court did not involve any decision as to the rights of the parties in the arbitration proceedings, but simply decided that the award given was abortive. It did not deal or pretend to deal with any of the matters raised in the special case, which are left undecided by the order. The order left the rights of the parties just as they were before. The question now raised is whether that order is a final or an interlocutory order. It seems to me that, judged by any of the tests which have been suggested in the cases, it is an interlocutory order. The parties to the arbitration are, in my opinion, in substance in the same position for this purpose as the parties to a litigation. The law has asserted its jurisdiction over these consensual arrangements for the determination of disputes between the parties, and having thus introduced the machinery of the law, which gives legal effect outside and beyond the consent of the parties to those arrangements, it seems to me that the proceedings ought to be treated as proceedings in a litigation. Where there are disputes between the parties and provision is made for the determination of those disputes by arbitration, and there is introduced the machinery of the court which crystallizes the disputes and brings them to the determination of the arbitrator, who is acting under the jurisdiction sanctioned by the court, it seems to me that in those circumstances an order made by the court, not dealing with any of those disputes at all, but leaving them exactly where they were before and merely asserting an infirmity in the award, must be treated as an interlocutory order. The court retains its jurisdiction over the matter, and may send it to another arbitrator. That is enough to decide this case, and therefore an order must be made transferring the appeal to the interlocutory list. We refrain from laying down any general rule upon the subject, because the matter is within the jurisdiction of the Rule Committee, and it seems to us to be more fitting that the Rule Committee should do it by means of a new rule than that the court should lay it down in a case in which it is not necessary to do so. The costs of this application will be costs in the appeal.

A company had passed a special resolution to alter the articles of association of the company by inserting provisions therein for the creation of an internal reserve fund, in respect of which the auditors should be bound to withhold all information from the shareholders. A shareholder brought an action to restrain the company and its directors from acting on such resolution.

Held, that any regulations which precluded the auditors from availing themselves of all the information to which under the Act they were entitled, as material for the report which under the Act they were to make as to the true and correct state of the company's affairs, were inconsistent with the Act, and that the resolution was therefore invalid.

This was the trial of an action brought by Sir A. J. Newton, suing on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders of the company, against the company, claiming a declaration that a special resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the company held on the 24th of January, 1906, and confirmed at an extraordinary general meeting held on the 21st of February, 1906, to alter the articles of association of the company by inserting provisions for the creation of an internal reserve fund was ultra vires and invalid, and an injunction to restrain the company and its directors from acting upon such resolution.

The company was incorporated in 1896 under the name of the Birmingham Small Arms and Metal Co. (Limited), with a capital of £600,000, divided into 79,370 ordinary shares of £5 each, and 40,630 preference shares of £5 each.

(a.) Reported by EDWARD J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a special resolution of the company duly passed and confirmed the name of the company was in 1897 altered to the Birmingham Small Arms Co. (Limited).

The special resolution which formed the subject-matter of the present action was, so far as material, in the following terms:

"That the articles of association of the company be and they are hereby altered as follows:

"(1) By the insertion after article 133 of the following article: 133A. In addition and without prejudice to the powers conferred by articles 132 and 133, the directors may in any year in which they shall recommend a dividend to be paid on the ordinary shares of the company of not less than 10 per cent. on the amount paid up thereon, set aside (without disclosing the fact) out of the earnings or profits in such year remaining after providing the amounts necessary to pay the dividends payable on preference shares, and the dividend which they recommend on the ordinary shares, such a sum as they may deem necessary or desirable in the interest of the company as an internal reserve fund, or as an addition to such internal reserve fund when formed, which internal reserve fund shall be held upon the terms and for the purposes following—that is to say:

"(a) The internal reserve fund shall be separate from the reserve fund under article 132, and need not be shown in or disclosed by the balance-sheet, and the directors need not give any information to the shareholders as to the amount, investment, or application thereof, or otherwise in relation thereto, either in their report or otherwise."

"(b) Such internal reserve fund may be invested upon such investments (other than the shares of the company) as the directors may in their absolute discretion think fit, without their being liable for any depreciation of or loss in consequence of such investments, whether the same be usual or authorized investments for trust funds or not.

"(c) Such internal reserve fund may be used and applied at the discretion of the directors for any purpose for which the ordinary reserve fund is available or for any purpose which the directors in their absolute discretion may consider will serve, protect, or advance the interests of the company, or preserve or promote the value of the undertaking, assets, or goodwill of the company."

"(d) The directors shall disclose the internal reserve fund and the amount thereof and all additions thereto and all other particulars in respect of the said fund to the auditors of the company appointed by the shareholders, whose duty shall be to see that the same is applied for the purposes of the company in accordance with the provisions hereinbefore contained, but not to disclose any information with regard to the same to the shareholders or otherwise."

The material articles were as follows: "132. The directors may, but shall not be obliged, before recommending or declaring any dividend or bonus out of or in respect of the earnings or profits of the company for any yearly or other period, cause to be reserved, or retained and set aside, out of such profits, such sum as they may think proper to form a reserve fund or reserve funds to meet contingencies or depreciation in the value of the property of the company, or for equalizing dividends, or for repairing, improving, and maintaining any of the property of the company, providing against losses, meeting claims on or liabilities of the company, or for such other purposes as the directors shall in their absolute discretion think conducive to the interests of the company."

"133. All moneys carried to the reserve fund and all other moneys of the company not immediately applicable or required for any payment to be made by the company, may be either employed in the business of the company or be invested by the directors upon such securities (other than the purchase of or loan upon shares of the company) as the directors may from time to time think proper, with power for them to make such investments in the name of the company or of the trustees for the company as they may think fit, and from time to time to deal with and vary such investments, and to dispose of all or any part thereof for the benefit of the company, and to divide the reserve fund into such special funds as they may think fit."

"134. The directors shall cause true accounts to be kept of the moneys received and expended by the company and all matters in respect of which such receipt and expenditure take place, and of the property, assets, credits and liabilities of the company."

"137. At the ordinary meeting in every year the directors shall lay before the company a balance-sheet containing a summary of the property and liabilities of the company, made up to a date to be therein mentioned, which shall be as near the day of meeting as can conveniently be fixed."

"139. The accounts of the company shall, once at least in every year, be examined and audited by an auditor or auditors. . . ."

"144. Every account of the directors, when audited, and approved by a general meeting, shall be conclusive, except as regards any error discovered therein within three months next after approval thereof; and whenever any such error is discovered within that period the account shall forthwith be corrected and thenceforth shall be conclusive."

The new article was to be inserted as article 133A after article 133.

Buckmaster, K.C., and H. K. Newton, for the plaintiff.—The resolution was ultrà vires and ought not to be acted on. It would enable the directors to conceal from the shareholders the true position of the company and to withhold all information as to the amount of the internal reserve fund and how the same was dealt with. It would also compel the auditors to disregard the statutory obligations imposed on them by section 23 of the Companies Act, 1900, which was practically an embodiment of the provisions of section 7 of the Companies Act, 1879, with reference to the audit of accounts of banking companies registered after 1879. Before the Act of 1900 there was no statutory requirement as to auditing. The Act of 1862 was silent as to accounts. The shareholders had the right to call on the managers of their property to keep such accounts that they might ascertain whether the management had been properly conducted. The directors could not refuse to lay a balance-sheet before the shareholders; they were accounting parties and had to show how they had used the property of the company. Directors of a company had been defined as "commercial trustees" or "managing partners": In re Forest of Dean Coal Mining Co., 27 W. R. 594, 10 Ch. D. 450. The statutory rights of shareholders, such as the right to petition for winding up and the right to dissent and be paid out on a reconstruction, could not be excluded by the company's articles: In re Peveril Gold Mines (Limited), 46 W. R. 198, [1898] 1 Ch. 122; Payne v. The Cork Co. (Limited), 48 W. R. 325, [1900] 1 Ch. 308. Nor could the statutory right to have proper information under section 23 of the Act of 1900 be excluded. Section 21 of the Act required the shareholders at each annual meeting to appoint an auditor, and if that was not done a shareholder could apply to the Board of Trade to appoint an auditor, and by section 23 the auditor had to report and certify to the shareholders. The duties of auditors were laid down in In re London and General Bank, 44 W. R. 80, [1895] 2 Ch. 673. It was not open to the company by its articles to compel an auditor to commit a misdemeanour by disobeying section 23 of the Act of 1900.

Sir R. B. Finlay, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the company.—The propositions of law put forward were not disputed. There was no attempt made by the new article to prevent the auditor from carrying out his statutory duty. There was in it nothing inconsistent with section 23 of the Act of 1900, and the duties thereby imposed on the auditor. That section did not require a balance-sheet. It said that the auditors must sign a certificate at the foot of the balance-sheet, and must report on every balance-sheet laid before the company; but the article did not prevent the auditors from correctly certifying and reporting. The shareholder's right to have a balance-sheet depended on the articles, and a balance-sheet might be wholly dispensed with. It was a well-known practice to write down the value of assets so as to show a smaller margin for dividends. Rights which were not statutory might be controlled by the articles. The object of the new article was to prevent information going out which might injure the company and assist rival traders. It was only proposed to do with the assent of the shareholders what was done every day without such assent.

BUCKLEY, J.—In February last this company passed special resolutions the short substance of which is that the directors may, under defined circumstances, set aside (without disclosing the fact) out of the profits sums to form an "internal reserve fund"—a sort of secret service fund—and that this fund need not be shown in or disclosed by the balance-sheet and no information need be given to the shareholders as to its amount, investment, or application; that the directors may invest it as they think fit without being liable for loss in consequence of such investments; that they may apply it for any purposes which they consider will advance the interests of the company; and that, while the particulars as to this fund are to be disclosed to the auditors, it is to be the auditors' duty not to disclose any information with regard to it to the shareholders or otherwise. The question for decision is whether, having regard to sections 21 to 23 of the Companies Act, 1900, these special resolutions are ultra vires. The Companies Act, 1862, was silent as to accounts. Table A (which the company might or might not adopt, as it chose) contained provisions on the subject, but otherwise the Act left the matter untouched, relying, no doubt, upon the application of the ordinary principles applicable as between partners and proceeding upon the footing that the members of a company under the Act are partners in a special sort of partnership modified and governed by statutory provisions. The Companies Act, 1879, s. 7, contained, for the first time, provisions as to audit of accounts, and was confined to banking companies registered after 1879 as limited companies. The Companies Act, 1900, ss. 21 to 23, for the first time contained provisions as to the audit of the accounts of other companies under these Acts. The provisions of the Act of 1879 and those of the Act of 1900 are closely similar, though not the same; so similar, indeed, as that the reason for the difference is hard to see. The principal differences that I trace are that the Act of 1879 does, while the Act of 1900 does not, provide affirmatively for an annual audit, and that the Act of 1879 does, while the Act of 1900 does not, provide that if there is no auditor a meeting shall be forthwith called to elect an auditor. As regards the former of the differences, I think that the Act of 1900, though it does not do so expressly, yet does impliedly provide for an annual audit. Section 21, sub-section 1, requires the annual appointment of an auditor to hold office for one year, and the Act contemplates that he will audit during his tenure of office. There will thus result an annual audit. As regards the latter difference, I find that section 21, sub-section 2, provides for the appointment of an auditor by the Board of Trade on the application of any member in case an auditor has not been appointed at the annual meeting. Neither statute contains any provision in favour of the public in the matter of publication of the accounts. The two statutes really do not differ, I think, in substance in their result. The question is how far the Act of 1900 goes in requiring for the protection of the members that the accounts shall be open to audit and that the report on them shall be made to the members. The defendants do not dispute that, if and so far as the special resolutions are inconsistent with the Act, it is the Act which must prevail. The concluding sentence of section 23 requires that the auditor shall state whether the balance-sheet exhibits a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs as shown by the books. Sir Robert Finlay argued that these words are satisfied if the auditors report that the balance-sheet does not exhibit a true view and that the statute does not, in these words, say that they shall report what is the true view. This is logically true as regards the language, but, in my judgment, the statute is saved from the reproach of having achieved no more than this impotent result by words earlier in that section, which provide that the auditors are to report to the shareholders on the accounts. A report upon the accounts involves a report of the result of the accounts, and this necessarily involves, as matter of substance if not of form, the statement of a balance-sheet or the equivalent of a balance-sheet. There are, I agree, in the Act of 1900 no affirmative words to the effect of what I am about to state, but I think the language of the Act is sufficient to show that by implication it requires that there shall be annually an audit of accounts resulting in a balance-sheet, to the accuracy of which the auditors shall speak. The special resolutions in the present case provide that the balance-sheet shall not disclose the internal reserve fund. It must therefore omit on the assets side of the balance-sheet the assets which make up the amount standing to the credit of that fund and the contra item—namely, the credit balance of the fund—on the liability side. The result will be to show the financial position of the company to be not as good as in fact it is. If the balance-sheet be so worded as to show that there is an undisclosed asset, the existence of which makes the financial position better than shown, such a balance-sheet will not, in my judgment, be necessarily inconsistent with the Act of Parliament. Assets are often, by reason of prudence, estimated, and stated to be estimated, at less than their probably real value. The purpose of the balance-sheet is primarily to show that the financial position of the company is at least as good as there stated, not to show that it is not or may not be better. The provision as to not disclosing the internal reserve fund in the balance-sheet is not, I think, necessarily fatal to the special resolutions. The Act, however, provides that the auditors shall report to the shareholders on the accounts examined by them. These auditors will examine, among others, the accounts of the internal reserve fund. A principal question in this case, I think, is whether it is a compliance with these words of the Act that the auditors shall report that they have examined the accounts as to the internal reserve fund, that they are satisfied with them, and that the funds have been employed in manner authorized by the company's regulations, or whether there will be default in complying with the Act if they do not go on to say how the fund has been employed. In my judgment such a report would be a sufficient report within the Act if the auditor is bonâ fide satisfied that in making this report, and nothing further, he is truly reporting as to "the true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs." But the special resolutions do not stop there. They provide that it shall be the duty of the auditor not to disclose any information with regard to this fund to the shareholders or otherwise. It is, I think, inconsistent with the Act of Parliament that the auditor shall be bound, even when he thinks that the true state of the company's affairs is affected by facts relating to the internal reserve fund, to withhold all information with regard to the same from the shareholders. If, for instance, the directors had invested the internal reserve fund upon investments which might involve the company under certain circumstances in enormous loss, the Act, I think, requires that the auditor shall be at liberty and be bound to report that fact. In reporting upon the accounts submitted to them the auditors do not, of course, report as to the details of the accounts to which they find no cause to take exception. Their duty is to call attention to that which is wrong, not to condescend upon all the details of that which is right. It is, I think, competent to the statutory majority of the shareholders to say that as to particular items of their business it is to the interest of the corporation that there shall be secrecy, and that the auditors, who must for the purposes of their audit know all such details, shall not, unless their duty under the statute requires it, disclose such details to the members.

There is no suggestion in this case that these clauses are intended to be used for any other than a legitimate purpose. Those who are engaged in commerce are familiar with the fact that undue publicity as regards the details of their trade, or as to their financial arrangements, may often be injurious to traders, having regard to the rivalry of competitors in trade, to complications sometimes arising from strained relations between capital and labour, and the like. There are legitimate reasons for ensuring secrecy to a proper extent. It is not, I think, necessary, nor, having regard to the great utility of these Acts, is it desirable to expose persons who trade under these Acts to the necessities of a publicity from which their competitors are free unless such publicity is required to ensure commercial integrity. I am not disposed to look too closely for reasons why I should find clauses such as these to be inconsistent with the Act if I see that the true purpose of the Act is satisfied. I think, however, these special resolutions go too far. Any regulations which preclude the auditors from availing themselves of all the information to which under the Act they are entitled as material for the report which under the Act they are to make as to the true and correct state of the company's affairs, are, I think, inconsistent with the Act.

Will—Construction—Intention—Gift "in addition" to prior gift.

A testator by a codicil to his will gave a legacy of £1,000 to a class, and by a subsequent codicil gave £50 to each of the class "so that each receives £100." Each member of the class received more than £100 under the original gift.

Held, that the subsequent bequest was a clear gift to each member of the class which was not cut down by the words which followed.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons taken out by nine godchildren of the testator to determine whether by the will and codicils and in the events which had happened each of the said godchildren were entitled to a sum of £50 bequeathed by the third codicil in addition to a share in a legacy of £1,000 bequeathed by the first codicil.

The testator made his will dated the 20th of May, 1887, and by the first codicil thereto, dated the 22nd of August, 1895, bequeathed "the sum of £1,000 to be divided equally among such of my godchildren as shall at the time of my decease be the recipients, through my cousin, Ferdinand H. Segelcke, of Cuxhaven, of Christmas presents from me."

By a third codicil, dated the 23rd of November, 1899, the testator bequeathed "£50 additional to each of my godchildren as named in my will, so that each receives £100 each."

The testator died on the 24th of April, 1901, and his said will and codicils were duly proved by his executors.

At the time of the testator's death there were nine godchildren coming within the description in the first codicil, so that the share of each in the gift bequeathed by that codicil amounted to over £100.

Younger, K.C., and Heckscher, for the plaintiffs.—The words of the third codicil might mean that each is to receive not less than £100. There is no case in which a gift has been cut down by a mere expression of intention. Each godchild ought to receive £50 in addition to the share in the £1,000 legacy: Gordon v. Hoffmann, 7 Sim. 29; Mann v. Fuller, 2 W. R. 510, 1 Kay 624; In re Rowe, 46 W. R. 357, [1898] 1 Ch. 153.

Hughes, K.C., and Jones, for the executors.—The godchildren are not entitled to take the gift of £50 under the third codicil. They have already received all the testator intended them to take. The controlling idea is to fix the amount each godchild is to take, not to give a fixed additional sum: Milner v. Milner, 1 Ves. sen. 105; Jordan v. Fortescue, 10 Beav. 259; Farrer v. St. Catherine's College, 21 W. R. 643, 16 Eq. 19; Trevor v. Trevor, 5 Russ. 24; Morgan v. Middlemiss, 14 W. R. 414, 35 Beav. 278; Wilson v. Morley, 25 W. R. 690, 5 Ch. D. 776; Ives v. Dodson, 9 Eq. 401, 18 W. R. Dig. 156.

JOYCE, J., in giving judgment, after reading the codicils, said: At the date of the testator's death there were nine such godchildren as were included in the legacy given by the first codicil, so that each has received more than £100. What I am asked to say is that the legacy given by the third codicil is absolutely nugatory or, in other words, I am to strike out that clause. As I read it, it appears to me to be a clear gift of £50 additional to each godchild. That is followed by some words which may refer to motive or may be a mere miscalculation of the amount each godchild is to receive; they may have been inserted for various reasons and may mean different things. A number of cases have been cited in which a figure named has been increased, but no case where a figure named in a gift has been cut down. I cannot conceal from myself that what I am going to decide is contrary to the dictum of Lord Hardwicke in Milner v. Milner, but there is one principle never now departed from in the construction of wills—namely, that a clear gift is not to be cut down by subsequent words of doubtful import. I am really asked to strike out the clause from the codicil or to deprive the words of any meaning, because of words following, which may merely be a miscalculation of the effect of the gift. I accordingly hold that the legacies of £50 are payable to the godchildren in addition to their share in the legacy of £1,000.

Will—Ademption—Legacy to adopted child—Advancement to adopted child—Bequest of residue to adopted child and stranger.

A testator bequeathed to his adopted daughter a sum of £3,000 and a share of residue. By a codicil he gave to her various sums previously advanced to her by him. Between the making of this codicil and his death the testator gave a further sum of money to his adopted daughter. On a summons to determine whether the legacy and bequest of residue were pro tanto ademed,

Held, that there was no ademption, and that the doctrine of ademption would not be applied in favour of a stranger as against a child.

Originating summons.

The object of this summons was to determine a question arising in connection with the will of a testator who died on the 13th of June, 1905. The will was dated the 28th of July, 1901. By it the testator bequeathed a legacy of £50 to Eliza Emma Barton, the wife of Charles Arthur Barton, and a legacy of £500 to Charles Arthur Barton, and also, inter alia, a legacy of £3,000 to Mary Ellen Fryer free of duty. He divided the residue of his estate between Charles Arthur Barton and Mary Ellen Fryer.

The testator made a first codicil to his will, upon which no question arose, and on the 29th of August, 1903, he made a second codicil. This second codicil recited that the testator had advanced certain sums of money to his adopted daughter, Mary Ellen Fryer, for investment by her, and gave her the sums which had been so advanced. Since making this codicil the testator gave to his adopted daughter further sums of money, including one of £1,000.

The summons was issued in order to decide the question whether the legacy to the adopted daughter of £3,000 was pro tanto ademed by the subsequent gift to her of £1,000. The full circumstances of the case are dealt with in the judgment.

Duke, for the executors of the will.

Eve, K.C., and Mark Romer, for the adopted daughter, Mary Ellen Fryer.—There is no ademption of the legacy, the testator was in loco parentis to Mrs. Fryer, and the advances were not made with any intention of ademing the legacy.

They cited Meinertzhagen v. Walters, 20 W. R. 918, 7 Ch. App. 670, and Fowkes v. Pascoe, 23 W. R. 538, 10 Ch. 343.

Micklem, K.C., and J. M. Stone, for Charles Arthur Barton.—The gifts of money must operate in ademption of the legacy to Mrs. Fryer. [They cited Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508; Montefiore v. Guedalla, 8 W. R. 53, 1 De G. F. & J. 93; Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 140, at p. 151; Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. 262; Powys v. Mansfield, 6 Sim. 528, & 3 M. & C. 359.] The earlier cases show that a child is, in some respects, in a worse position than a stranger.

SWINFEN EADY, J., explained the object of the summons, summarized the will and codicils, and continued: Mrs. Fryer went to live with the testator, and she acted as his housekeeper. From the evidence it appears that the testator had an account with the London and County Bank. He also had some money on deposit with the London and Westminster Bank. At intervals he drew cheques on his banking account; these were cashed, and he retained the proceeds, and from time to time gave money to Mrs. Fryer for purposes of housekeeping. This went on until shortly before the death of the testator. During the ten or twelve months preceding his death the cheques were cashed by Mrs. Fryer, and she retained the proceeds and made the usual household disbursements. The testator also gave money in both large and small sums to Mrs. Fryer for her own use, and a list of these sums has been put in evidence. The sums paid in this way before the making of the second codicil amount to several thousands of pounds. They were given in varying amounts; sometimes in sums of £20 or less, and sometimes in sums as large as £1,000. The smaller sums were drawn from the account at the London and County Bank, and the larger from the money on deposit with the London and Westminster Bank. From time to time the testator wrote letters to the latter bank, asking that money forming part of the money on deposit might be transferred to the account of Mrs. Fryer. This went on until one of the testator's deposit accounts was exhausted. There was another deposit account remaining at the London and Westminster Bank at the testator's death.

According to the evidence of Mrs. Fryer, what took place was this. In addition to cheques drawn by the testator for the purposes of household expenses, the testator was in the habit of giving to Mrs. Fryer cheques and cash as presents for herself at irregular intervals. The testator said he made these gifts in order that they might be invested in Mrs. Fryer's own name for her own benefit. Mrs. Fryer was living with a very old man as his daughter, and she took care of him and looked after him as a daughter. The testator treated her as if she were his daughter, and the nature and amount of the gifts and the mode of making them do not cause any suspicion. She invested her own money with the assistance of a solicitor. The sums of money paid to her personally were gifts which she is not liable to account for. Even without the codicil she would not have had to account for them, but by the codicil he gives her the sums advanced and already paid to her. After making the second codicil the testator gave her certain further moneys amounting to the balance of the money on deposit with the London and Westminster Bank. These moneys included a sum of £1,000 and it is said that, as the testator by his will gave to Mrs. Fryer a legacy of £3,000 and a moiety of his residue, and this sum of £1,000 was paid to her since the making of the second codicil, there was ademption of the £3,000 legacy to that extent. It is clear that the £1,000 was given to Mrs. Fryer for her own use.

Now, as to the question of ademption, if a parent gives to a child a legacy or share of residue, and then gives money to the child, the legacy or share is adeemed pro tanto. But it is not every gift from a parent to a child that is to be treated as an ademption. Though a sum is paid on the marriage of a daughter, it has to be asked whether that sum is a portion or not. This £1,000 cannot be treated as a portion. Previous to the payment of the £1,000 the testator had given to Mrs. Fryer large sums of money. After the making of the codicil a particular sum of £1,000 was given. It was not paid under any special circumstances or for any specific purpose. The facts of the particular case must be considered, and in this case I do not consider that the sum of £1,000 need be brought into account. The doctrine of ademption is considered in Montefiore v. Guedalla, 8 W. R. 53, 1 De G. F. & J. 93.

In that case the Lord Chancellor said (at p. 100): "While it was strangely supposed that there could not be ademption pro tanto, there might be some colour for giving weight to the argument arising from the alleged uncertainty of the amount of a residue. But after the decision in Pym v. Lockyer, 5 M. & C. 29, establishing that there may be ademption pro tanto, the cases relied upon to shew that there is a distinction on this subject between a bequest of a specific amount and the bequest of a residue, are left without any reasonable support."

Also in Meinertzhagen v. Walters, 20 W. R. 918, 7 Ch. 670, James, L.J., said at the beginning of his judgment, "The contention of the appellant is, that if a father leaves his residue between a child and a stranger, and then makes a large advance to the child and also a large advance to the stranger, there being nothing more but the will and those advances, the law of England is this, that the child is obliged to bring what he has received into the residue, and that the stranger is not to bring in what he has received, but is to have it enlarged by that which has been given to the child." James, L.J., strongly disapproved of that contention. In Fowkes v. Pascoe, 23 W. R. 538, 10 Ch. 343, James, L.J. (at p. 350), said: "The rule of law is that legacies given by a father, or a person in loco parentis, are or may be adeemed by gifts between the will and the death. The principle is that the will shows the distribution which the father thinks just and expedient for his children, and if, after having made such a scheme for distribution, he advances one of his children on marriage, or going out to establish himself in the world, or the like, it is to be presumed, as a presumptio juris et de jure, that the advancement is an anticipation of the testamentary provision, just as under the Statute of Distributions an advancement is to be brought into hotchpot. But this presumption applies only to fathers or persons who have put themselves in loco parentis.

No case has been cited where residue was given by a testator and the doctrine applied against a child, and I know of no case where the doctrine has been applied against a child in favour of a stranger. Such an application of it would work peculiar hardship. I therefore determine that in respect of none of the sums paid or given by the testator to Mrs. Fryer after the date of the second codicil was there ademption pro tanto of the £3,000 legacy or the share of residue, and that none of them need be brought into account.

Ex parte O'SHEA. (a.)

Criminal law — Cruelty to animals — One act — Conviction for cruelty to several animals—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), ss. 2, 29.

A conviction under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, for having cruelly ill-treated five cows by causing them to be over-stocked with milk, was appealed against on the ground that the conviction was bad on its face, in that it was a conviction for five separate and distinct offences.

Held, that an act or omission affecting several animals might constitute one offence under the section, and that it was not necessary that there should be a separate summons and separate conviction in respect of each animal.

Rule nisi to justices of the borough of Guildford to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to bring up a certain conviction in order that the same might be quashed. The rule was moved for and obtained on the ground that the conviction was bad on the face of it, in that it was a conviction for five separate and distinct offences.

The conviction was as follows: "In the borough of Guildford. Before the Court of Summary Jurisdiction sitting at Guildford. The thirtieth day of October, 1905. Con. O'Shea, of Newmarket, County Cork (hereinafter called the defendant), is this day convicted for that he on the tenth day of Octobers 1905, did cruelly ill-treat, abuse and torture five cow, by causing the same to be over-stocked with milk contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And it is adjudged that the defendant for his said offence do forfeit and pay to the clerk of this court the sum of forty shillings, and do also pay to him the sum of ten shillings and sixpence for costs forthwith."

Colam showed cause against the rule.—The conviction is good. A somewhat similar point was raised in Reg v. Justices of Devonshire, cited in 56 J. P. 455, sub. nom. Reg. v. Totnes Justices, and is an authority for the proposition that an information alleging cruelty to more than one animal is good. There have been many cases in which this course has been followed: Murphy v. Manning, 25 W. R. 540, 2 Ex. D. 307; Lewis v. Fermor, 35 W. R. 378, 18 Q. B. D. 532; Ford v. Wiley, 37 W. R. 709, 23 Q. B. D. 203, but in none was it suggested that the summons was bad on that account. It is also material on this point to note that section 29 of the Act of 1849, inter alia, provides "that words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to a plurality of persons, animals, or things.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Scholefield, in support of the rule.—The proper test to apply to decide the question whether a conviction on this ground is good or bad is to ask whether it refers to one offence or to more than one. In Milnes v. Bale, 23 W. R. 660, L. R. 10 C. P. 591, Brett, J., at p. 594, laid down that rule, "Where the different acts were so far distinct and separate offences in kind that to prove a person guilty of any one of them evidence could not be given of the doing of any other of them." Applying that to the present case a separate offence was here committed in respect of each cow, and the statute imposes a separate penalty in respect of each. In Ex parte Beal, L. R. 3 Q. B. 387, the same view was expressed. In the Totnes case the question was whether an information which charged the defendants with having cruelly beaten, ill-treated, abused, and tortured two heifers, was bad, because, as it was contended, each of these four alleged acts of cruelty under section 2 constituted a separate offence. The court said it did not, but the point that the information was also bad because it referred to two heifers does not to appear to have been taken. The decision is not an authority, therefore, in the present case.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case the defendant was charged with an offence under section 2 of the Act of 1849, and it is not immaterial to observe (although having regard to the Interpretation of Statutes Act, 1889, it may not be very important) that the words denoting the singular number are to be understood to include the plural; that does seem to show that it was thought necessary to give power in the Act of 1849 to deal with cases involving cruelty to a number of animals, as, for example, a flock of sheep. It would, in my opinion, be a very vexatious view of the law if it were held to be necessary that a summons should be taken out in regard to each animal alleged to have been ill-treated, and it might well put the prosecutor to some difficulty as to proof. But while I take this view, I desire to say that I have no doubt that separate summonses may be taken out in respect of each animal alleged to have been ill-treated.

It is contended that the conviction in this case is bad on the face of it because it refers to cruelty to five cows, which, it is said, necessarily involves five separate offences. In my opinion the case of Reg. v. Totnes Justices, which is also reported in the Times newspaper of the 9th of May, 1879, is an indirect authority of this court for the view that this conviction is good. On referring to the papers in that case which I have obtained from the Crown Office, I find that there a summons had been obtained against the defendants for cruelty to two heifers by overdriving them. The justices upheld the objection that the information was bad as it charged four separate offences. A rule nisi for a mandamus was obtained, and was subsequently made absolute. That was a case in which it appeared on the face of the information that cruelty to two heifers was alleged, and the court came to the conclusion that the case was one which the justices ought to have heard and determined. It is therefore a decision in a case in which objections to the form of the information were being considered by the court in which it was held that an information for an offence against two animals was good. It is further to be observed that it has been the practice for a long series of years to do what has been done in the present case. In Murphy v. Manning the summons was for cutting the combs of three cocks; in Lewis v. Fermor the cruelty was alleged in respect of five sows; and in Ford v. Wiley there were two informations, one charging cruelty to sixteen oxen on one date and the other cruelty to sixteen oxen on another date. It is true that in none of these cases the point now argued before us appears to have been taken, but it is curious that, if the point is a good one, it should not have been raised in any of these cases. I think, therefore, that by the implied authority of this court the decisions are against the contention that this conviction is bad because it refers to five cows. For these reasons I think this rule must be discharged.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of Mr. Scholefield's argument that this conviction is bad in form, and if the question came before the court for the first time I should have had some difficulty in deciding against that view, but it appears to me that the matter is concluded by the case of Reg. v. Totnes Justices to which we have been referred.

BRAY, J.—I agree. I only desire to say that I should have come to the same conclusion if there had been no authority upon the point.

Rule discharged.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

In re GARNER.
Ex parte PEDLEY. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Practice—Taxation of costs—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 73—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886-1890, rr. 112, 124, Form 141—Scale of Costs, 1886-1890, General Regulations, r. 2—Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882, Schedule I.

In taxing the costs of a solicitor who has acted for the trustee in business connected with sales of property of the bankrupt, under regulation 2 of the General Regulations as to costs in bankruptcy, the taxing-master need not consider whether there are any proceeds of sale out of which the costs can be paid, but should merely allow the proper amount of costs, and direct that such amount is to be paid in accordance with regulation 2 of the General Regulations.

Appeal against a taxation by the taxing-master of the High Court in bankruptcy.

The estate of the bankrupt consisted largely of plots of land. Each of the plots were separately mortgaged to a first mortgagee, and there was a second mortgage covering all the plots generally. The trustee employed a solicitor to sell three of the plots, and the money derived from the sale was employed in paying off the first mortgagees in full and in part payment of the second mortgage with the exception of a small sum of £1 9s. 11d., which was handed over to the trustee after the above-mentioned payments had been made. It was estimated that when all the plots were sold they would realize sufficient to pay off both the first and second mortgages and leave a considerable surplus for the estate.

The solicitor brought in his bill for taxation by the registrar of the county court at Crewe, who allowed the costs of the sale at £16 10s., as being the proper percentage on the gross amount realized by the sale in accordance with the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882. The Board of Trade required the taxation to be reviewed by the bankruptcy taxing-master of the High Court.

The taxing-master refused to allow the solicitor more than £1 9s. 11d., and based his decision upon rule 2 of the General Regulations as to costs in bankruptcy, which provides that where a solicitor is entitled to remuneration by a percentage "such percentage shall be payable only out of the proceeds of sale." In the present case all the "proceeds of sale" beyond £1 9s. 11d. had gone in payment off of the mortgagees, and as that was the only sum available for the payment of the solicitor the taxing-master taxed down the costs to that amount.

The solicitor appealed.

T. R. Hughes, K.C., and Redman, for the appellant.—The taxing-master has nothing to do with the question of whether there is a fund out of which the costs will be payable; all he has to do is to assess the amount of costs properly payable to the solicitor, and issue an allocatur for that amount. In the present case, when the plots are all sold there will be a fund out of which the solicitor can be paid, but as long as this allocatur stands good he will get no more than £1 9s. 11d. It is suggested that the taxing-master should issue an allocatur for the proper amount of costs without prejudice to the question of how they are to be paid.

Hansell, for the Board of Trade.—If the allocatur be issued for the full amount the solicitor will have to pay the full stamp duty of 1s. on every £2 allowed, and if he sends in his allocatur and claims payment on it from the trustee the Board of Trade will have to go behind it and refuse the trustee leave to draw a cheque on the bankruptcy estates account if there are no "proceeds of sale" out of which the amount can be paid.

BIGHAM, J.—I think that in this case it is the duty of the taxing-master to tax in accordance with the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and for that purpose he must have regard to the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882; but having so taxed he should note, on giving his certificate, that the amount is only to be paid in accordance with rule 2 of the General Regulations as to costs in bankruptcy, leaving the parties to ascertain whether there exist any proceeds of sale out of which the costs are payable.

The form of allocation should be as follows: "I hereby certify that I have taxed the bill of costs of Mr. C. D., and have allowed the same at the sum of pounds, shillings, and pence, and the amount is to be paid in accordance with regulation 2 of the General Regulations as to costs in bankruptcy."

Appeal allowed; leave to appeal given.

ACT OF STATE:—

Annexation of native State—Confiscation of property of infant ruler—Distinction between his private and State property—Assumption of guardianship by Government—Jurisdiction of municipal courts.—Where the East India Co., as representing the Crown, has done acts of such a nature, and under such circumstances, as to lead to the conclusion that those acts were done in the exercise of supreme power, as acts of State, and to negative any intention to give thereby legal rights, whether contractual or otherwise, to an individual or individuals as against the company, the municipal courts have no jurisdiction to question the validity of those acts, or to entertain any claim in respect thereof by an individual against the Secretary of State for India, as the successor of the East India Co.

ADEMPTION:—

Will—Legacy to adopted child—Advancement to adopted child—Bequest of residue to adopted child and stranger.—A testator bequeathed to his adopted daughter a sum of £3,000 and a share of residue. By a codicil he gave to her various sums previously advanced to her by him. Between the making of this codicil and his death the testator gave a further sum of money to his adopted daughter. On a summons to determine whether the legacy and bequest of residue were pro tanto adeemed,

Held, that there was no ademption, and that the doctrine of ademption would not be applied in favour of a stranger as against a child.—HEATHER, RE, POMFREY v. FRYER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 625; [1906] 2 Ch. 230; 75 L J. Ch. 568.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Insolvent estate—Transfer of proceedings in Chancery to Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 125.—The intention of the Legislature in section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is that estates of deceased insolvents shall be administered in Bankruptcy in the same way, so far as possible, as those of living bankrupts. Consequently proceedings for adminstration of a deceased insolvent's estate commenced in Chancery, were ordered to be transferred to Bankruptcy in the absence of any special reasons for retention. Such reasons are difficult questions of law, or the fact that the Chancery proceedings are far advanced.—KENWARD, RE, HAMMOND v. EADE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 94 L. T. 277.

2. Marshalling assets—Debts, funeral and testamentary expenses—Insufficiency of personal estate—Pecuniary legatees—Specific devises—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 2, sub-section 3.—Where a will contains a direction charging debts upon the real estate, and the personal estate is exhausted in paying the debts, the Land Transfer Act does not alter the old rule under which the pecuniary legatees were entitled to have the assets marshalled as against the specific devises.

In re Roberts, Roberts v. Roberts, 51 W. R. 89, [1902] 2 Ch. 834, followed.—KEMPSTER, RE, KEMPSTER v. KEMPSTER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 385; [1906] 1 Ch. 446; 75 L. J. Ch. 286; 94 L. T. 248.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Inspector of nuisances, power to take proceedings—Local authority—Analyst—Justices—Jurisdiction—Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 20, 26; 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), ss. 3, 25, 28—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.—Magistrates have jurisdiction to hear and determine an information preferred under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, by an inspector of nuisances duly appointed by a town council, on behalf of the said council, although the said council be not one of the authorities referred to in section 10 of the said Act, and therefore not authorized to appoint an analyst for the Acts, and consequently not a local authority as defined by section 25 of the Act of 1899. Such a condition of things only affects the question as to the allocation of the fine inflicted by the magistrates, as dealt with in section 25 of the Act of 1875.—WORTHINGTON v. KYRNE, K.B.D., 185; 93 L. T. 546.

2. Margarine—"Parcel"—Margarine Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 29), s. 6.—Six rounded pieces of margarine placed in the form of a triangle so that three form the base, two being placed upon the three and one upon the two, all touching, sufficiently form one "parcel" within section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887.—PARKINSON v. MCNAIR, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 553.

3. Analysis—Condition precedent—Analysis impossible through no fault of applicant—Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 9, 14, 21, 22; and 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 21.—Section 21 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, provides: "The justices or court referred to in section 22 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, shall on the request of either party under that section cause an article of food or drug to be sent to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for analysis, and may, if they think fit, do so without any such request.

If through no fault of the party sought to be burdened, the analysis by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, contemplated by the above section, is a matter of impossibility, the court may convict for an offence under section 9 of the Act of 1875, notwithstanding that the analysis has not been made. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue reported that an examination of the bottle of milk submitted for analysis showed that the cork was loose and portions of fat and dried milk were adhering to the outside of the bottle and the paper wrapper, and that under these circumstances a satisfactory examination of the milk was not possible.

Held, that the court having come to the conclusion, upon proper evidence, that the milk was adulterated, the defendant was properly convicted.—SUCKLING v. PARKER, K.B.D., 438; [1906] 1 K. B. 527; 75 L. J. K. B. 302.

4. Milk—Defence—Written warranty—Application of warranty to future deliveries—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 25.—An information was preferred by the appellant against the respondent, charging him with selling to the appellant, on the 28th of December, 1905, milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the appellant. On the date in question the respondent sold to the appellant a pint of new milk which contained 16 per cent. of added water. The milk in question had been supplied to the respondent by one Mott, under a contract made in August, 1905. On the 5th of August, after the making of the contract, but before the delivery of any milk thereunder, Mott had given to the respondent a letter in the following terms: "I guarantee that the milk supplied by me to Mr. Stevens is perfectly pure and with all its cream as the cow gives it. (Signed) FRANCIS MOTT." Both the respondent and Mott intended this to be a continuing warranty. The milk which was sold to the appellant had not been purchased with any warranty, except in so far as the above letter constituted a warranty. The justices were of opinion that the letter was intended by both parties to cover the delivery of milk of which one pint was sold to the appellant, and they discharged the respondent. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices came to a correct determination in point of law.

The Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling, J., Ridley, J., dissenting) allowed the appeal.—WATTS v. STEVENS, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 323.

5. Sample—Division to three parts—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63).—When an article is purchased for analysis under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, each of the three parts into which it is divided pursuant to section 14 of the Act must be sufficient for the purpose of analysis.—LOWERY v. HALLARD, K.B.D., 520; [1906] 1 K B. 398; 75 L. J. K. B. 249; 93 L. T. 844.

ANNUITY:—

Will—Tenant for life and remainderman—Residuary personalty—Covenant to pay life annuities—Capital and income—Apportionment.—A testator directed that his residuary estate should be held on trust for a life tenant and a remainderman. He had covenanted to pay certain annuities.

Held, that each instalment of the annuity should be apportioned between capital and income, according to the value of the life estate and the reversion as ascertained at the time of the testator's death.

Yates v. Yates, 28 Beav. 637, followed.—DAWSON, RE, ARATHOON v. DAWSON, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 556; [1906] 2 Ch. 211; 75 L. J. Ch. 604; 94 L. T. 817.

APPEAL:—

1. Appeal to Court of Appeal—Time—Order of Divisional Court upon case stated by magistrate in civil proceedings—Final order—Ord. 58, r. 15.—A final order of a Divisional Court made upon a case stated by a magistrate in civil proceedings is an order made in a "matter not being an action" within the meaning of ord. 58, r. 15, and an appeal to the Court of Appeal must be brought within fourteen days.—AUSTIN FRIARS STEAM SHIPPING CO. v. STRACK, C.A.; 94 L. T. 875.

2. Interlocutory or final order—Motion to set aside award—Ord. 58, rr. 3, 15.—An award of an arbitrator was stated in the form of a special case. Before the special case came on for hearing, the Divisional Court, upon the application of one of the parties, set the award aside upon the ground of some technical misconduct on the part of the arbitrator. Upon appeal from the order of the Divisional Court, Held, that the order was an interlocutory and not a final order, and the appeal ought, therefore, to be entered in the interlocutory list.—CROASDELL AND CAMMELL, LAIRD, & CO., RE, C.A., 620.

APPOINTMENT:—

1. Power of—Excessive exercise of power—Invalidity.—A testator gave to his son a power to appoint certain real estate in certain events to his (the donee's) sons for life, with remainder to their issue in tail. By a testamentary instrument the donee, after referring to the power given to him by the testator, appointed one part of the estate "to my eldest son E. R. A. and his issue."

Held, that the court was not at liberty to speculate as to the meaning of the terms of the appointment, but must interpret it according to the actual language used; and that there was nothing in that language to entitle the court to put a different construction on the appointment than that the donee intended that E. R. A. should take an estate tail.

Decision of Buckley, J. (93 L. T. Rep. 742), reversed.—ADAMS, RE, ADAMS v. ADAMS, C.A.; 94 L. T. 720.

2. Power of appointment—Special power—Exercise by will—Remoteness.—A testator gave a life interest in his estate to his wife, and after her death he gave the estate to such of the children of his brother C. T. as his wife should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children of his brother and sister in equal shares after life estates to his brother and sister. The wife of the testator by her will appointed the estate to C. T. for life, and after his death to the children of C. T. who had attained or should attain twenty-five if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one if born after her death, or, being a female, had attained twenty-five if born in her lifetime, or twenty-one if born after her death, or should be previously married, and if more than one in equal shares. C. T. survived both the testator and his wife. All the children of C. T. were born in the lifetime of the testator's wife, and had attained twenty-five prior to her death, and one of them had attained twenty-five prior to the death of the testator.

Held, that the appointments were not void for remoteness, as the persons who would take under the will, and the shares they would take, would necessarily be ascertained and their shares vested, not later than twenty-one years from the death of C. T., who was alive at the death of the testator, the person by whose will the power was created.—THOMPSON, RE, THOMPSON v. THOMPSON, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 613; [1906] 2 Ch. 199; 75 L. J. Ch. 599.

3. Will — Remoteness — Doctrine of election. — Persons taking a settled fund as in default of appointment in consequence of the appointment purported to be made by the will of the appointor being void for remoteness, and also having bequeathed to them by the same will other property belonging to the testatrix, are not put to their election between the settled fund and the property of the testatrix bequeathed to them, but are entitled to retain both without making compensation.

A testatrix having a power of appointment by will over certain settled property, and also being possessed of property of her own, devised and bequeathed her real and residuary personal estate, and all real and personal estate over which she had power of appointment by will, to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold £10,000, part of the proceeds of sale, upon certain trusts, and the the residue of the proceeds of sale upon other trusts. Some of the trusts were, as regards the settled property, void for remoteness.

Held, that the persons taking in default of appointment, who were also beneficiaries of the testatrix's own property, were not put to their election between the two properties.

Held, also, that the £10,000 must be considered as taken proportionately out of the settled property and the property belonging to the testatrix, according to their respective values.

ASSIGNMENT:—

1. Debt—Absolute assignment by writing—Request to debtor to pay third person—Equitable assignment—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-section 6.—The respondents were indebted to K. for the price of goods sold. K. sent to the appellants a letter, to be forwarded by them to the respondents, signed by himself, and addressed to the respondents, as follows: "Kindly sign the attached letter and forward same to" the appellants. The "attached letter" was addressed to the appellants, and was as follows: "Herewith we beg to confirm that we shall remit . . . the amount of invoices—£369 and £3,263 . . . received from K. & Co. when due direct to you for account of K. & Co." The letter was returned to the appellants signed by a person who had no authority to sign on behalf of the respondents.

Held, that the documents constituted a good equitable assignment of the debt apart from section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.—BRANDT & CO. v. DUNLOP RUBBER CO., H.L.; [1905] A. C. 454; 74 L. J. K. B. 898; 93 L. T. 495.

2. Debt—Covenant by assignee to repay assignor—Intention to make debtor bankrupt—Maintenance—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—The plaintiff and the defendant were co-directors of a company. The plaintiff, being dissatisfied with the conduct of the defendant as a director, obtained from various creditors of the defendant an assignment of the debts owing from him to them, with the object of procuring an adjudication of bankruptcy against the defendant and of so getting him removed from the board of directors. The plaintiff covenanted with the creditors to pay over to them so much of the debts as he might be able to recover after payment of all costs necessarily incurred by him. This covenant was the only consideration for the assignment. The plaintiff having brought an action on the assignment, the defendant set up the defence that the conditions of the assignment and the purpose for which it was procured rendered it unenforceable, as evidencing a transaction which savoured of maintenance.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

Comfort v. Betts, 39 W. R. 595, [1891] 1 Q. B. 737, followed.—FITZROY v. CAVE, C.A., 17; [1905] 2 K. B. 364; 74 L. J. K. B. 829; 93 L. T. 499.

3. "Effects, contracts, and engagements"—Claim for damages for breach of contract—Rights of assignee. A trader had a claim against a company for unliquidated damages for breach of contract. Upon his becoming bankrupt his trustee in bankruptcy by deed assigned the goodwill of the bankrupt's business, and also "all the book and other debts, securities, credits, effects, contracts, and engagements belonging or appertaining to the said business."

Held (reversing the decision of A. T. Lawrence, J.), that these words were sufficient to pass to the assignee the bankrupt's claim for damages for breach of contract.—WEINBURG v. OGDENS (LIMITED), C.A.; 93 L. T. 729.

ATTACHMENT:—

1. Disobedience to order—Service of order—Presence in court when order made—Service after date fixed for doing act—Prohibitive order—R. S. C. ord. 41, r. 5; ord. 44, r. 2.—Where an order is made requiring a defendant to pay a sum of money into court on or before a certain date, although the defendant is present in court when the order was made, in order to found a motion for attachment upon it, it must be served on the defendant personally, except where, in the opinion of the court, the service has been evaded.

Dictum of Cotton, L.J., in Hyde v. Hyde, 13 P. Div. 171, overruled.

In the case of a prohibitive order, however, proof that notice of the order has reached the defendant is sufficient.—TUCK, RE, MURCH v. LOOSEMORE, C.A.; [1906] 1 Ch. 692; 75 L. J. Ch 497; 94 L. T. 597.

2. Executor—Debt due from him to estate—Order for payment into court—Non-compliance—Possession as trustee or in a fiduciary capacity—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 4, sub-section 3.—T. B. by his will appointed J. B. one of his executors, and he duly proved the will. At the time of T. B.'s death J. B. was indebted to him on four promissory notes for £500 each.

By a judgment of the 18th of July, 1905, in an action in the Chancery Division, J. B. was declared accountable for that sum "as assets in his hands" belonging to the testator T. B., with interest, and was ordered to pay the same into court. He did not comply with the order of the court, and had, after the commencement of the proceedings, sold all his assets, including his farming stock, and surrendered a policy of life insurance, handing over the proceeds to other creditors, and shortly after service of the order of the 18th of July, 1905, filed his petition in bankruptcy, on which a receiving order was made on the 26th of August, 1905, two days after the period for compliance with the order of the court expired.

Held, that J. B. was a person acting in a fiduciary capacity and ordered by a court of equity to pay a sum in his possession within section 4, sub-section 3, of the Debtors Act, 1869; and that on the merits the court ought to direct a writ of attachment to issue against him.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.

Dictum of Malins, V.C., in In re Diamond Fuel Co., Metcalfe's case, 13 Ch. Div. 820, overruled.

In re Woodward, Woodward v. Woodward, 81 L. T. R. 353, explained.—BOURNE, RE, DAVEY v. BOURNE, C.A.; [1906] 1 Ch. 697; 75 L. J. Ch. 474; 94 L. T. 750.

3. Four-day order—Order on two persons—Service on one—Construction—"After service of this order."—Two defendants were ordered to lodge a sum in court "within four days after service of this order." The order was served on one defendant only, the other not being able to be found.

Held, that the words "after service" meant after service upon the person against whom the order was to be enforced, and that a writ of attachment might be issued against the defendant who had been served.—ELLIS, RE, HARDCASTLE v. ELLIS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 526.

AUSTRALIA, LAW of:—

1. Appeal—Special leave to appeal from High Court of Australia.—Where petitioners for special leave have elected to appeal to the High Court of Australia, from which it is known that there is no further appeal without special leave, their lordships will not, except in a very special case, entertain their petition.—VICTORIAN RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS v. BROWN, P.C.; [1906] A. C. 381.

2. Excise duties—Power to impose—Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 12), ss. 51, 86, 88, 90, 99.—The Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia has power under the Constitution Act, 1900, to impose duties of excise before uniform duties of customs in the several States have been imposed.

Where a uniform rule as to duties of excise was laid down by the Commonwealth Parliament applicable to all States alike, but it operated unequally in the several States in consequence of the inequality of duties imposed by the States themselves,

Held, that the duties were not imposed in a manner which discriminated between States or gave one State a preference over another, in violation of the provisions of the constitution.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—COLONIAL SUGAR REFINING CO. v. IRVING, P.C.; [1906] A. C. 360; 75 L. J. P. C. 54; 94 L. T. 387.

3. Statutes—Construction—Australian Lunacy Act, 1898—Powers of committee of lunatic.—In the construction of statutes it is not to be assumed that all persons not specifically included in a protecting clause are for that reason alone excluded from the protection of the statute.

Therefore, as the committee of a lunatic has power to put the person found lunatic in proper care and custody, persons acting under the instructions of the committee, in good faith, and with due care, and without unnecessary violence, are not liable to an action, although they are not specifically protected by the Australian Lunacy Act, 1898.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—MCLAUGHLIN v. WESTGARTH, P.C.; 94 L. T. 831.

BAILIFF:—

Cause of action—County court—Alleged act, neglect, or default of high bailiff—Non-service of judgment summons—Committal—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (a).—So long as a committal order stands, an action will not lie at the suit of a judgment debtor against the high bailiff of the county court for not having served him. the debtor, with the judgment summons upon which the order is made.

Any such action against the high bailiff, by virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, must be brought within six months of the "act, neglect, or default" complained of, and therefore it must be brought within six months of the time when the bailiff made the return of the service of the judgment summons and the county court judge acted upon it.

The date of the arrest on the committal order is not the date of the "act, neglect, or default."—TURLEY v. DAW, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 216.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Notice to creditors that debtor could not meet his engagements—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (h).—A declaration by a debtor that he is unable to pay in full, made to his Stock Exchange creditors, and permission given to them to close their accounts,

Held, not sufficient notice within the meaning of of section 4, sub-section 1 (h), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, that the debtor had suspended or was about to suspend payment of his debts.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Reis, Ex parte Clough, 54 W. R. 122, [1904] 2 K. B. 769, affirmed.—CLOUGH v. SAMUEL, H.L., 114; [1905] A. C. 442; 74 L. J. K. B. 918; 93 L. T. 491.

2. Annulment—Payment in full—Release by creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 35 (1).—In order to obtain the annulment of an adjudication in bankruptcy by proving to the satisfaction of the court that all debts have been paid in full under section 35 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the payment in full must be a payment of money, and a debt which has been released by a creditor voluntarily, or for small consideration, is not paid in full within the meaning of the section.—KEET, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, C.A., 20; [1905] 2 K. B. 666; 74 L. J. K. B. 694; 93 L. T. 259.

3. Bill of sale—Apparent possession—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 8.—The bankrupt being indebted to a friend, and having no property but her furniture, transferred the furniture in satisfaction of the loan, and carried out the transaction by documents which were found in fact to constitute an absolute bill of sale. Subsequently the sheriff seized the goods in execution, and was actually in possession when the bankrupt filed her own petition. The trustee in bankruptcy claimed the furniture, and sought to set aside the bill of sale as void for want of registration.

Held, following Ex parte Saffery, In re Bremner, 29 W. R. 749, 16 Ch. D. 669, that a bill of sale could not be avoided because at the date when the bankrupt filed her petition the goods were not in her possession or apparent possession, but in the possession of the sheriff.—BALES, RE, STEEL, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 202.

4. Contract for works—Power to engineer to order direct payment to those supplying contractor with machinery—Exercise of such power after receiving order against the contractor.—The bankrupt had entered into a contract to do certain work for a public authority. The contract contained a clause empowering the engineer to order direct payment by the public authority to those supplying machinery to the contractor in case he should have reasonable cause to believe that the contractor was unduly delaying payment to them. At the date of the receiving order some of the firms who had supplied machinery were unpaid, and the engineer subsequently ordered direct payment to be made to them out of the money which remained due from the public authority to the bankrupt at the date of the receiving order.

Held, that the engineer was entitled to make such order, and that the trustee could not recover such money from the public authority, as the effect of the filing by the bankrupt of his petition was that payment to the machinery firms was unduly delayed.

Held, also, that the authority given by the contractor to the engineer under the clause in question was irrevocable by the contractor and consequently irrevocable by the trustee in his bankruptcy.—WILKINSON, RE, FOWLER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 157; [1905] 2 K. B. 713; 74 L. J. K. B. 969.

5. Costs—Taxation—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 73—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886-1890, rr. 112, 124, Form 141—Scale of Costs, 1886-1890, General Regulations, r. 2—Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882, Schedule I.—In taxing the costs of a solicitor who has acted for the trustee in business connected with sales of property of the bankrupt, under regulation 2 of the General Regulations as to costs in bankruptcy, the taxing-master need not consider whether there are any proceeds of sale out of which the costs can be paid, but should merely allow the proper amount of costs, and direct that such amount is to be paid in accordance with regulation 2 of the General Regulations.—GARNER, RE, PEDLEY, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 627; [1906] 2 K. B. 213; 75 L. J. K. B. 584.

6. Deed of assignment — Petitioning creditor — Estoppel by assent to the deed—Petition founded on act of bankruptcy other than the deed.—A creditor who has assented to a deed of assignment, but who is not bound by it, although he may be prevented from alleging that the assignment for the benefit of the creditors was an act of bankruptcy, is not prevented from presenting a petition founded on an independent act of bankruptcy.—MILLS. RE, MILLS, EX PARTE, C.A., 322; [1906] 1 K. B. 389; 75 L. J. K. B. 247; 94 L. T. 41.

7. Deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors—Bankruptcy proceedings instituted within the next three months—Effect of payment made to trustee of assignment deed—Protected transaction—Right of the trustee in the bankruptcy to enforce payment of the debt—Relation back of trustee's title—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 49 (2).—The defendant being indebted to a builder for work done, and the builder having made an assignment of his property in favour of all his creditors, the defendant paid the amount of her debt to the trustee of the assignment deed, having been notified by the trustee of the execution of the deed and required to pay the debt to him. Within three months of the execution of the assignment deed a bankruptcy petition was presented against the builder founded on the act of bankruptcy occasioned by the execution of the deed, and he was adjudicated a bankrupt. The assignment trustee having failed to pay over to the trustee in bankruptcy the money received from the defendant, the trustee in bankruptcy sued the defendant.

Held, that, as the defendant had notice of the act of bankruptcy when the debt was paid to the assignment trustee, the payment was not a protected transaction, and the trustee in the bankruptcy was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant for the benefit of the bankrupt's creditors. —DAVIS v. PETRIE, K.B.D., 30; [1905] 2 K. 11. Letters of lien on goods bought with advance—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4—Bills of Sale Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 53)—Bills of Sale Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 35)—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—Where bankers advanced money to traders for the purpose of paying for goods, and the traders gave the bankers letters of lien thereon, it was held, on the bankruptcy of the traders, that the letters were "documents used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods," and so, being within the exceptions of section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, need not be registered under the Bills of Sale Acts. It was also held that the Bills of Sale Acts, 1890 and 1891, had no bearing on the case. It was further held that goods covered by the letters of lien and sent by the traders to certain manufacturers before sale by the traders, and which were claimed by the bankers before the bankruptcy, were not "at the commencement of the bankruptcy in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupts" as "the reputed owners thereof" within section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—HAMILTON, YOUNG, & Co., RE, C.A., 260; [1905] 2 K. 12. Notice—Final judgment for debt "and costs to be taxed"—Validity—Notice to pay judgment debt "in accordance with the terms of the judgment"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—Ord. 42, r. 18.—Where a creditor, having recovered judgment against a debtor for a debt "and costs to be taxed," served on the debtor, before the costs were taxed, a bankruptcy notice requiring him to pay the judgment debt, and subsequently, when the costs had been taxed, presented a bankruptcy petition alleging that the debtor was indebted in the amount due on the final judgment, being the judgment debt and the taxed costs, it was held that the bankruptcy notice was valid, as it required the debtor to pay the judgment debt "in accordance with the terms of the judgment," within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, having regard to the provisions of ord. 42, r. 18, which entitles a creditor at his election to issue execution for the judgment debt separately from the costs.

13. Partnership — Assignment of book debts — Executed by one partner—Other partner's name added without consent—Equitable assignment—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 6.—One partner executed a deed assigning the book debts to a creditor of the firm. The signature of the other partner had been added to the deed without his consent, and he had no knowledge of the assignment. The deed was accepted in good faith by the creditor, who gave notice of the assignment to the debtors. Subsequently the partners became bankrupt.

Held, that whether or not the assignment was a valid deed, it was by virtue of the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 6, effective as an equitable assignment of the book debts.—BRIGGS & Co., RE, WRIGHT, EX PARTE, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 209; 75 L. J. K. B. 591.

14. Payment to creditor after petition—Protected transaction—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 49.—A payment made by a debtor before receiving order to one of his creditors in good faith and for valuable consideration, and taken by the creditor without notice of any available act of bankrupty, is a protected transaction within section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, even though made after the presentation of a petition against the debtor.

15. Petition—Deed of assignment—Acquiescence—Undue pressure—Sufficient cause for refusal of receiving order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c 52), s. 7, sub-section 3.—A petitioning creditor in bankruptcy, who recognizes that a trustee under a deed of arrangement has a good title, and who sells goods to the trustee and is paid by him therefor, is estopped from saying that the deed is a fraud upon creditors and an act of bankruptcy. A clause in a deed of arrangement authorizing the trustee by the direction of the committee of inspection or of the majority of the creditors to pay any creditor in full who does not execute or assent to the deed should not be inserted therein.—BRINDLEY, RE, TAYLOR & Co, EX PARTE, C.A., 301; [1906] 1 K. 16. Pledge of share certificates with bankrupt—Disappearance of pledgor—Power of sale by trustee in bankruptcy—Directions as to advertisement.—Where certain share certificates had been pledged with a firm which afterwards became bankrupt, and the pledgor had disappeared without repaying the loan, the trustee in bankruptcy was given permission to sell the shares after advertising for the pledgor as directed by the court.—HARRISON & INGRAM, RE, WHINNEY, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 203.

17. Power of appointment — Appointment by bankrupt's will—Property divisible among creditors —Creditors subsequent to receiving order—Assets.—H. G. had, under a settlement, a general testamentary power of appointment over a fund. By his will, made in 1892, he executed the power in favour of E. L., whom he appointed executor. A receiving order was made against H. G. in 1900, and he was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 1st of October, 1900. E. L. proved against the estate for £1,131. H. G. died in 1984 without having obtained his discharge. Between the date of the receiving order and the time of his death he had become indebted to various creditors.

Held, that the appointed fund was not property divisible amongst the creditors in the bankruptcy, either under section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1833, or by virtue of any equitable doctrine as to property appointed in exercise of a general testamentary power; that the trustee in the bankruptcy was not entitled to receive the fund; that the duty of dividing it devolved upon the executor; and that the only creditors who had a right to share in the fund were the creditors who had become so after the bankruptcy.

19. Transfer of bankrupt's business to limited company—"Fraudulent conveyance" — Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (b). —A trader being in difficulties transferred his assets to a company in the bonâ fide hope of thereby benefiting his creditors. His assets were estimated at £2,000, and his debts at £1,000. The consideration for the transfer was an undertaking by the company to pay his debts and the allotment of ninety-four shares and debentures of the nominal value of £1,000. The debentures could not be enforced until interest was two months overdue—i.e., eight months from their issue, or until execution was put in against the company.

Held, that this transfer did not necessarily tend to defeat or delay creditors, was not a fraudulent conveyance within section 4, sub-section 1 (b), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and should not be set aside as void against the trustee in bankruptcy.—HARRIS, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 460.

BILL OF SALE:—

1. Registration—Execution creditor—Interpleader —Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 8.—Where a person sets up as against a judgment creditor a title for goods which have been throughout in the possession of the judgment debtor, the claimant must show either a registered title or something done with the goods which renders registration unnecessary.

A. sold his furniture to B., a company, retaining the possession of it for a weekly monetary consideration; the transaction was not registered under the Bills of Sale Acts. Subsequently B. sold this furniture to C., the mother of A., for £200, the furniture still remaining in the possession of A. A. then removed to another town, taking the said furniture with him. Upon seizure in execution of a judgment debt, C. claimed the furniture;

Held, that the furniture having remained throughout in the possession of A., C.'s claim was not protected, as she could not show a title by any registered bill of sale, or anything that rendered registration unnecessary.—HOPKINS v. GUDGEON, K.B.D., 419; [1906] 1 K. because the consideration was not "truly set forth" as required by section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882.

Both the plaintiffs and the defendant had held out the bill to be valid against creditors of the defendant.

Held, that as between the plaintiffs and the defendant the bill was valid; the defendant having elected to obtain an advantage by asserting the bill to be valid could not, to gain a further advantage, be heard to say that it was invalid, even, semble, assuming that its invalidity was known to both the parties.—COMITTI v. MAHER, *Ch.D. BURIAL-GROUND.

1. Burial within one-hundred yards of dwelling-house —Dwelling-house erected after acquisition of land for cemetery—Ground not "already" used—New cemeteries—Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), s. 9. —In 1905, a burial board purchased a piece of land for a cemetery. Subsequently to the purchase, an adjoining landowner built a house within one hundred yards of the cemetery. Upon motion by the landowner to restrain the board from allowing burials to take place within one hundred yards of his house, in contravention of section 9 of the Burials Act, 1855, which prohibits ground "not already used" as a cemetery from being used for burials within one hundred yards "from any dwelling-house" without the consent of the owner:

Held, that "already" meant at the time of the passing of the Act in 1885; and that the Act protected houses even though built subsequently to the acquisition of any cemetery laid out since 1855, and that the injunction must be granted.—GODDEN v. HYTHE BURIAL BOARD, C.A.; 75 L. J., Ch. 595.

2. Consecrated and unconsecrated parts of a cemetery —Sanction of Secretary of State—Rights of incumbent — "Services rendered" —Burials by Nonconformist minister—Burial Acts, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), s. 32; 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), s. 7; 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 15), s. 3.—A part of a cemetery which has been duly consecrated for the purposes of burials in accordance with the rites of the Church of England is consecrated ground, although the sanction of the Secretary of State, under section 7 of the Act of 1853, has not been obtained. The possible effect of the absence of such sanction may be that the fees could not be enforceable at law.

The incumbent of a parish is not entitled to any fee under section 3, sub-section 4, of the Burial Act, 1900, unless he has rendered services in respect of the burial.—WILLIAMS v. BRITON FERRY BURIAL BOARD, K.B.D., 187; [1905]; 2 K. B. 565; 74 L. J. K. B. 840; 92 L. J. 696.

3. Erection of monument—Right of incumbent to fees in respect of—Burial Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 15), s. 3, sub-section 4 (1).—By the Burials Act, 1900, s. 3, sub-section 4, it is enated that "no fee shall be payable to any incumbent in respect of any right of exclusive burial, or the erection of a monument, or any other matter whatsoever, in any burial-ground maintained by a burial authority except for services rendered him," but a proviso to the section preserved the rights of incumbents in "burial-grounds . . . laid out and used before the passing of this Act."

Held, that the above proviso did not apply to additional land which had been purchased by the local authority for the purpose of being added to the existing burial-ground, and which had been, previous to the passing of the Act, laid out as a burial-ground. but in which no burials had in fact taken place till subsequent to the passing of the Act, and that the incumbent was not therefore entitled to the fees claimed by him in respect of the erection of monuments on the additional land.—YOUNG v. KINGSTON-ON-THAMES, SURBITON, AND NEW MALDEN JOINT BURIALS COMMITTEE, K.B.D., 507; [1906] 1 K. B. 338; 75 L. J. K. B. 225; 94 L. T. 196.

4. New burial-ground—Addition to existing burial-ground—Disused burial-ground—"Set apart for the purposes of interment"—Ground set apart without statutory authority—Burial Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), s. 1—Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 34), s. 1—Disused Burial-grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), s. 3—Open Spaces Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), s. 4.—For the purposes of the provisions of the Burial Act, 1853, which prohibit the opening of any new burial-ground within the limits there specified without the approval of a Secretary of State, an addition to an existing burial-ground stands on the same footing as the opening of an entirely new burial-ground.

A piece of land which has once been set apart for the purposes of interment, and in which interments have taken place, but which is no longer used for interments, is, by virtue of section 4 of the Open Spaces, 1887, a disused burial-ground within the meaning of the Disused Burial-grounds Act, 1884, and therefore incapable of being used for building purposes, although by reason of a failure to obtain the approval of a Secretary of State the original setting apart was not lawful.—BOSWORTH AND GRAVESEND CORPORATION, RE, C.A., 39; [1905] 2 K. CANADA, LAW of:—

1. Civil Code of Quebec, art. 1056—"Indemnity or satisfaction"—Right of action by widow of deceased —Subscription to insurance and provident society.—In a case where a person dies in consequence of injuries received by the commission of an offence or quasi-offence, the release or discharge by the deceased of his possible right of action is not of itself "satisfaction" within the meaning of art. 1056 of the Civil Code of Quebec, unless the deceased has thereby obtained from the offender a real and tangible indemnity or satisfaction for the offence or quasi-offence in question.

Therefore where a servant of a railway company was killed by the negligence of the company or its servants,

Held, that the fact that he was at the time of his death a member of an insurance and provident society, one of the bye-laws of which provided that "in consideration of the subscription of the company to the society no member thereof, or his representatives, shall have any claim against the company for compensation on account of injury or death from accident," was no bar to an action by his widow, under art. 1056 of the Civil Code, for the damages which she had sustained by his death.

Judgment of the court below reversed.

2. Crown lands—Right of Dominion Parliament to legislate with respect to—Canadian Railway Act (44 Vict. c. 1), sect. 18 (a)—Consolidated Railway Act of Canada (42 Vict. c. 9).—The Dominion Parliament of Canada is competent to legislate with respect to provincial Crown lands, and a section in an Act of the Dominion Parliament empowering a railway company to take possession of the foreshore for the purpose of constructing their railway, "in so far as the same shall be vested in the Crown and shall not be required by the Crown," held not to be limited to Dominion Crown property.

The express provisions of a railway Act must prevail over the general provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act of Canada.

3. Lower Canada—Civil Code, art. 1018—Contract—Construction—By art. 1018 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, "all the clauses of a contract are interpreted the one by the other, giving to each the meaning derived from the entire Act."

By a contract entered into between the appellants and the respondents, the appellants agreed to establish and work lines of railway for the conveyance of passengers in the city by means of cars propelled by electricity, and the respondents conferred upon the appellants privileges with regard to the use of electric power in the streets. The contract provided that the appellants should pay to the respondents annually certain percentages "upon the total amount of its gross earnings arising from the whole operation of its said railway." A schedule specified certain routes upon which the cars were to run within the city of Montreal.

The appellants afterwards extended their system beyond the limits of the city.

Held, that the percentages were only payable upon the gross earnings arising from the whole operation of the line within the limits of the city.

4. Ontario—Action for passing off—Injunction—Competency of appeal.—By the Revised Statutes of Ontario, c. 48, s. 1, no appeal shall lie to the King in Council unless the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of 4,000 dollars. The appellant brought an action against the respondent for an injunction to restrain him from infringing certain trade-marks of the appellant, and from passing off his goods as the goods of the appellant, and for damages. The Court of Appeal for Ontario gave judgment for the appellant.

Held, that, no sum or value being in controversy, the appeal was not competent. — GILLETT v. LUMSDEN, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 601; 74 L. J. P. C. 155; 93 L. T. 314.

5. Ontario—Practice—Payment of interest — Ontario Judicature Act, R.S.O., 1897, c. 51, s. 113.—Under the Ontario Judicature Act, 1897, in all cases where in the opinion of the court the payment of a just debt has been improperly withheld, and it seems to be fair and equitable that the party in default should make compensation by payment of interest, it is incumbent upon the court to allow interest for such time and at such rate as the court may think right.

6. Ontario—Practice—Power of court to allow interest not claimed—Discretion of court.—The court has power, on further directions, to order the payment of interest on a sum found to be due from a defendant, although the decree declaring the liability contains no direction for the payment of interest, and the statement of claim does not ask for it.

It is a matter for the discretion of the cour under the circumstances of the particular case.

Judgment of the court below varied.—BURLAND v. EARLE, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 590; 74 L. J. P. C. 156; 93 L. T. 313.

7. Ontario—Provincial Statute (36 Vict. c. 102), s. 5—Water commissioners—Powers of expropriation—Water required for purpose of waterworks—Procedure under statute—Damages—Injunction.—Water commissioners, incorporated to supply a town with water, were empowered by statute to enter upon lands and to divert and appropriate water for the purposes of their waterworks, making compensation to the owners.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that they were acting within their powers in appropriating land and water rights, not for the purpose of storing water to be supplied to the town, but for generating power to raise the water supplied to the required height.

But in a case in which they had appropriated land and water rights without following the procedure as to compensation laid down by the statute,

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that an owner who had sustained injury by such appropriation could maintain an action, and was entitled to an injunction to restrain the commissioners from continuing or repeating the acts complained of, and not only to damages for the trespass.—SAUNBY v. CITY OF LONDON WATER COMMISSIONERS, P.C.; [1906] A. 9. Quebec—City of Montreal Act (52 Vict. c. 79)—Right to recover assessment for local improvements—Prescription.—By section 120 of the Charter or Act of the City of Montreal (52 Vict. c. 79) a period of prescription of three years is imposed for the recovery of any tax, assessment, or rate made under the Act, to be counted from the time when such tax, assessment, or rate becomes due. An assessment was made under the Act for certain public improvements, and proceedings were taken to set it aside on the ground of certain alleged irregularities.

The Court upheld the validity of the assessment.

Held, that the pending proceedings did not prevent the period of prescription from running, and that the amount of the assessment could not be recovered after the lapse of three years from the time when it first became due.

Judgment of the court below affirmed. — MONTREAL CITY v. CANTIN, P.C.; [1906] A. C. 241; 75 L. J. P. C. 41; 94 L. T. 357.

10. Quebec—Privilege of lessor in liquidation proceedings—Civil Code, art. 2005.—The respondents let property in Montreal by lease to B. & Co. for the purposes of their business. In 1899 B. & Co. made a judicial abandonment of their property for the benefit of their creditors. At that time they owed more than two years' rent to the respondents. By art. 2005 of the Civil Code, as it stood at the date of the lease, the lessors were entitled to rank as privileged creditors for the whole rent due. Between the date of the lease and the liquidation the article had been amended, and the lessors' privilege was restricted to two years' rent.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the case was governed by the law as it stood at the date of the liquidation, and the respondents could only claim privilege in respect of two years' rent, and ranked as ordinary creditors for the balance.—ROSS v. BEAUDRY, P.C.; [1905] A. CHAPEL:—

Public building or domestic oratory—Consecration.—A chapel which originally was part of the fabric of a mansion-house, but which became a separate building owing to a mansion-house being pulled down and rebuilt on a different site, had divine service and baptisms of the children of the owners of the mansion-house performed in it by the vicar of the parish.

In an action by the vicar for a declaration that he and his successors was and were entitled to the possession and control of the chapel and to perform divine service and celebrate the sacraments in the chapel according to the rites of the Church of England,

Held, that the chapel was not a consecrated public building, and had never been more than a domestic oratory.—NEVILL v. STUDDY, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 94 L. T. 391.

CHARITY:—

1. Will—Gift for ringing of church bells—Gift for headstones in churchyard—Gift to "public charities and institutions."—A testatrix by her will made (inter alia) the following bequests: The sum of £1 to be paid to the bellringers a parish church to ring a peal annually "in commemoration of the happy restoration of the monarchy to England"; the income of the sum of £700 to be applied in the erection and maintenance of headstones on the graves of certain poor persons buried in the churchyard; and a gift of residue "to and amongst such public charities and institutions" as her trustees should think fit.

Held, that each of these gifts constituted a good and effectual charitable bequest.—PARDOE, RE, MCLAUGHLIN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 561; [1906] 2 Ch. 184; 75 L. J. Ch. 455; 94 L. T. 567.

2. Will—Gift to be applied under direction of executors — Cy-près. — A testatrix directed her executors to apply a sum to their satisfaction and under their direction towards the enlargement and equipment of a hospital. The enlargements were carried out in the lifetime of the testatrix.

Held, that there was not an immediate gift to the hospital, but that the executors ought to expend so much of the said sum as they thought proper in equipment, and in the event of a balance remaining in their hands, should apply to the court for directions.—UNITE, RE, EDWARDS v. SMITH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 358; 75 L. J. Ch. 163.

3. Will—Public institutions—Charitable institutions and other general purposes of locality.—A testator in the events which happened gave part of his residuary estate upon trust for charitable, educational, or other institutions of the town of Kendal, and also for such other general purposes for the benefit of the town of Kendal or its inhabitants as his trustees should think fit. Certain institutions at Kendal, a hospital, grammar school, and free library were suggested by the testator, without binding his trustees to adopt the suggestion, as suitable institutions.

Held, that the gift was a valid charitable trust.

On applying to register a lease of land acquired by the society for the new headquarters, it was objected by the registrar that no disposition thereof could be made without the consent of the Charity Commissioners as it was an "endowment," and that a restriction to that effect should be entered on the register.

Held, that there was nothing in the circumstances to show that the subscriptions of donors, which were specially allocated to the purposes of the society's new headquarters, were to be treated as capital and not as applicable to current expenses and to be treated as income of the year; that therefore the same did not constitute an "endowment," but came within the exemption contained in section 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and were excepted from the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners.

CLUB:—

Sporting—Rules—Power to alter—Object of club—Particular sport—Abolition by resolution—Validity of resolution.—A club was formed in 1868, one of the objects of which was to provide grounds and facilities for the sport of pigeon-shooting. From time to provision was made and facilities afforded for polo playing and other sports. One of the rules provided that any of the rules might be altered or added to at any general meeting of the club with the assent of a majority of two-thirds of the members. At the annual general meeting of the club, held on the 20th of May, 1905, a resolution was passed by the requisite majority that pigeon-shooting should be discontinued as from the 31st of December, 1905.

Held, that this resolution was valid.—THELLUSSON v. VALENTIA, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 369; [1906] 1 Ch. 480; 75 L. J. Ch. 368; 94 L. T. 468.

COMPANY:—

1. Action against company—Voluntary winding up—Stay of proceedings—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 85, 87, 138—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 25.—The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant company, which was being wound up voluntarily, to recover a sum of money as remuneration for services rendered to the company.

The liquidator, upon an application by the plaintiff for judgment under order 14, denied all liability of the company, and obtained unconditional leave to defend. The liquidator then applied for an order staying all proceedings in the action, upon the ground that the company was being wound up.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that, all liability being denied, the court ought not in the exercise of its discretion to stay proceedings in the action.—CURRIE v. CONSOLIDATED KENT COLLIERIES, C.A.; [1906] 1 K. B. 134; 75 L. J. K. B. 199; 94 L. T. 148.

2. Alteration of bye-laws—Assurance company—Policy participating in profits—Prospectus.—An assurance company was constituted by a deed of settlement, which provided that the profits were to be divided in manner directed by the bye-laws, and that any bye-law might be altered by a bye-law. Bye-laws were made which provided that the profits coming from the participating branch should be divided among the policy-holders in that department.

The respondent effected a policy on his own life in the participating branch on the faith of a statement in a prospectus of the company that the entire profits of that branch were divided among the policy-holders without any deduction for a reserve fund. The proposal form which he signed contained an undertaking to "conform to and abide by" the rules and regulations of the company in all respects, and a policy issued to him contained a covenant by the company to pay the sum assured, and all such other sums as might be added to such amount, "according to their practice for the time being." It was proposed to make a change in the regulations of the company, and to empower the directors to appropriate 5 per cent. of all profits, including those of the participating branch, to form a reserve fund.

Held, that the prospectus did not amount to more than a statement of the system in operation at the time when it was issued, and was no part of the contract between the company and the respondent, so as to debar the company from making the proposed alteration in the allocation of the profits.

3. Articles of association—Alteration of—Internal reserve fund—Auditors not to disclose information—Validity of article—Companies Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 76), s. 7—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), ss. 21, 22, 23.—A company had passed a special resolution to alter the articles of association of the company by inserting provisions therein for the creation of an internal reserve fund, in respect of which the auditors should be bound to withhold all information from the shareholders. A shareholder brought an action to restrain the company and its directors from acting on such resolution,

Held, that any regulations which precluded the auditors from availing themselves of all the information to which under the Act they were entitled, as material for the report which under the Act they were to make as to the true and correct state of the company's affairs, were inconsistent with the Act, and that the resolution was therefore invalid.—NEWTON v. BIRMINGHAM SMALL ARMS CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 621; 75 L. J. Ch. 627.

4. Bankruptcy—Right to participate in surplus assets of liquidating company as representing bankrupt—Shares partly paid up—Proof in bankruptcy not payment—Company—Liquidation—Distribution of surplus assets.—A shareholder liable as a contributory to a company must discharge his obligation before he can participate in a distribution of surplus assets of the company. Thus, where the holder of partly paid-up shares in a company becomes bankrupt, and the company proves in the bankruptcy for the amount of unpaid calls on the bankrupt's shares, the trustee cannot, although the company has received a dividend on their proof, participate in a distribution of surplus assets of the company until the holders of the fully paid-up shares therein have received the amount paid by them in excess of that paid by the holder of the partly paid-up shares.—WEST COAST GOLD FIELDS (LIMITED), RE, C.A., 116; [1906] 1 Ch. 1; 75 L. J. Ch. 23; 93 L. T. 609.

5. Conflict of laws—English company—Business carried on in foreign state—Debts incurred abroad—Company wound up—Shareholder personally liable for debts under law of foreign state—Attempt to enforce payment in English court.—An English company, incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Acts as a limited company, was formed for the purpose of acquiring and working mines in (among other countries) the United States of America. By the articles of association the directors were empowered to do all things necessary to comply with the requirements of the law of any country where the company might carry on business. The company acquired and worked mines in the State of California, and for that purpose the company had to be registered and was duly registered there, and it incurred debts there in the purchase of machinery from the plaintiff in that state. By the law of the State of California each stockholder of a corporation is made individually liable for debts contracted for by the corporation according to the proportion which his holding bears to the whole of the subscribed capital of the company. The company having become insolvent, the plaintiffs sued the defendant, a shareholder of the company, in this country, for his proportion of the price of the machinery.

Held, that the defendant was not liable, as the facts did not show that he authorized the company to enter into contracts in California so as to pledge his personal credit for the price of the goods supplied, and the general power given by the memorandum and articles of association to the directors to carry on business in foreign countries was subject to the fundamental condition of a limited liability on the part of the shareholders, the company being registered in England as a limited joint stock company.

6. Debentures—Issue—Deposit of blank debentures to secure loan.—A company borrowed money on the security of debenture bonds. The bonds were signed and sealed and left blank as to the date and name and were deposited with a bank. The loan was paid off and the debentures returned.

Held, that the transaction with the bank amounted to an issue, and that the company were not in a position to re-issue the debentures.—PERTH ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 535; [1906] 2 Ch. 216; 75 L. J. Ch. 534; 94 L. T. 815.

7. Debentures—Issue as security for loan—Payment off of loan—Debentures returned to company with blank transfers—Registered owner—Subsequent transfer to purchaser for value—Priorities.—A company duly issued a series of debentures, each of which was to rank pari passu with the others. Certain of these debentures were issued as collateral security for loans made to the company. On repayment of the loans these debentures were returned to the company with blank transfers, but they were not transferred to the company, and the original holders continued on the register as the owner of such debentures. Subsequently these debentures were transferred to holders for value by completing the blank transfers.

Held, that the transferees were not entitled to rank pari passu with those debenture-holde s to whom debentures had been at once issued for their full nominal value. The effect of what was done was to pay off an incumbrance which, even if it could be kept alive, could not be set up by the company, the original mortgagor, against subsequent incumbrancers, and the transferees were in no better position than the ocmpany.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (53 W. R. 247, [1905] 1 Ch. 283), affirmed.—TASKER & SONS, RE, HOARE v. TASKER & SONS, C.A., 65; [1905] 2 Ch. 587; 74 L. J. Ch. 857; 93 L. T. 195.

8. Debentures — Registration — Extending time — Winding up—Protection of creditors—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), ss. 14, 15.—A company in 1901 issued debentures which were not registered within twenty-one days as required by section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900. On the 24th of July, 1903, an order was made under section 15 of the Act extending the time for registration until the 14th of August. This order contained the proviso that "this order is to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such debentures shall be actually registered." The debentures were registered before the 14th of August, 1903.

Held, that the creditors of the company whose debts had been incurred prior to the date of registration take pari passu with the debenture-holders the share of the assets which the debenture-holders would have taken if their debentures had been duly registered in accordance with section 14 of the Act.

9. Debenture-holders' action—Appointment of receiver and manager — Preservation of property — Loans by debenture-holders to receiver—First charge given to lenders—Expenses of management and of receiver—Priority.—An action was brought by the plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and all other the debenture-holders of the defendant company to enforce the charge created by their debentures.

In February, 1901, a receiver and manager was appointed in the usual form; and in March, 1901, judgment was given directing accounts and inquiries.

On the 3rd of July, 1901, an order was made that the receiver be at liberty to borrow £500 for the purposes of preserving the property of the defendant company comprised in the debentures, the moneys so borrowed to be a first charge on such property.

Subsequently further orders were made for the borrowing of sums of £200, £200, and £100 for like purposes; and there was an order for the sale of certain chattels. These orders were obtained at the instance of the plaintiffs, and all the sums which the receiver was authorized to borrow under the above-mentioned orders were advanced by the plaintiffs themselves. Formal charges were executed to the plaintiffs by the receiver on the occasion of the advances, and they were expressed to be first charges upon the property comprised in or charged by the security created by the debentures. Neither charge contained any express reservation of the receiver's right to be indemnified out of the assets in respect of his costs and expenses properly incurred, but it was in each of them declared that the receiver should not be personally liable to repay the advances out of his own moneys.

The receivership had been prolonged from time to time with a view to a scheme of reconstruction, and considerable expense was necessarily incurred in keeping the mines and machinery in working condition. Eventually the company's lease was forfeited, and the only assets which the receiver was finally able to realize were certain fixtures and plant which were sold.

The money in the hands of the receiver was not sufficient to satisfy his own charges and to meet the above advances.

Held, that the form of the charges given by the receiver was not sufficient to deprive him of his primâ facie right to be indemnified out of the assets in respect of his costs and expenses properly incurred, and therefore they must be paid in priority to the money advanced by the plaintiffs.

11. Directors—Management—General meeting of shareholders—Resolution—Refusal of directors to carry out—Discretion—Construction of articles. — A company was formed to acquire the rights to manufacture and to license the manufacture of certain patent filters. A large majority of the shareholders of the company had subsequently entered into an agreement with another company for a sale to them of the whole of their assets, and requisitioned a meeting of shareholders at which a resolution approving the sale was carried by a majority, but the directors in the bonâ fide exercise of their discretion, determined not to carry the agreement into effect. An action was brought by the company and one of the shareholders for an order that the directors might be ordered forthwith to affix the seal of the company to the agreement and to carry the resolution passed at the meeting into effect, and might be restrained by injunction from dealing with the assets in any manner inconsistent with the terms of the agreement The articles of association of the company provided that the management of the business and the control of the company should be vested in the directors. Upon a motion asking for the relief claimed in the action pending the trial,

Held, that upon the construction of the articles this was not a resolution which the directors were bound to carry out, and the motion must be refused, as it was not competent for the majority of the shareholders at an ordinary general meeting to alter the mandate originally given to the directors by the articles of association.

12. Directors—Power of board to postpone meeting—Notice for ordinary meeting—Election of directors—Power to transact business of an extraordinary meeting.—In the absence of a special clause in the articles of association of a company under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, enabling them to do so, the directors have no power to postpone an ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the company, as distinguished from an adjournment of the meeting by the chairman with the consent of the meeting.

The fact that articles of association provide that ordinary general meetings are to be held in certain months does not prevent directors from calling extraordinary meetings of the shareholders at other times at which the business of ordinary meetings may be transacted, and if the meeting is called as an ordinary meeting at some other time of the year, it may nevertheless be treated as the ordinary meeting for the purpose of the election of directors and other ordinary business.—SMITH v. At a general meeting of the company, on a poll being demanded, the chairman of the meeting directed that it should be taken by means of voting papers sent to each member, which should be signed by the member voting and returned to the company's offices by a certain date.

Held, that the use of such voting papers was irregular and invalid, and an injunction was granted restraining the company from acting upon the result of any poll so taken.—MCMILLAN v. LE ROI MINING CO., Ch.D. Joyce, J., 281; [1906] 1 Ch. 331; 75 L. J. Ch. 174; 94 L. T. 160.

On the day following the appointment of the receiver and manager the garnishee order nisi was made absolute.

Held, that, regard being had to the conditions indorsed upon the debentures, as well as to the general nature of a debenture security, the receiver was entitled to the garnished debt as against the judgment creditor.

16. Memorandum of association—Objects—Construction—Subsidiary or substantive—Ultrà vires.—One of the objects of a company, as stated in the first paragraph of clause 3 of the memorandum of association, was to acquire the undertaking of an older company and certain gold mines in Mysore. The object in the second paragraph was to acquire gold mines "in Mysore and elsewhere." The language of both these paragraphs, allowing for a change of name of the company in the first paragraph, was identical with, and the language of the remaining twenty-three paragraphs was to all intents the same as, that of the objects of the defendant company in Stephens v. Mysore Reefs (Kangundy) Mining Co. (Limited), 50 W. R. 509, [1902] 1 Ch. 745. One object was to promote new companies for the company's benefit. The company resolved to enter into an agreement to acquire certain gold mines in India just outside Mysore, and to pay for them partly in cash and partly in their own shares or in shares of a new company to be promoted by them for the purpose.

Held, that the objects in paragraph 2 were not subsidiary to those in paragraph 1, and that consequently the agreement was authorized by paragraph 2, and was not ultrà vires.

17. Prospectus—Non-disclosure—Misleading statements—Sub-purchaser—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 10, sub-section 1 (f).—A company is not a sub-purchaser within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 (f), of the Companies Act, 1900, unless it has to pay purchase-money to someone other than its own vendor, and the sub-section does not require a company to state in its prospectus the amount of any consideration paid, or to be paid, by anyone other than the company.—BROOKES v. HANSEN, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 502; [1906] 2 Ch. 122; 75 L. J. Ch. 450; 94 L. T. 728.

18. Prospectus—Omission to state contract—Proof of damage—Waiver clause—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.—In an action against directors by a shareholder who has taken shares on the faith of a prospectus claiming damages under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he has sustained damage by reason of the non-disclosure of a material contract required to be disclosed by that section, and also that had he been aware of it he would not have taken the shares. Where there is no actual fraud, but a mistake honestly made by the directors, a waiver clause as to any fuller compliance with section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, is a sufficient answer to the action.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1904] 2 Ch. 681) reversed.—CALTHORPE v. TRECHMANN, H.L., 365; [1906] A. C. 24; 75 L. J. Ch. 90; 94 L. T. 68.

19. Prospectus—Omission of material contract—Subscription on faith of prospectus—Proof of damage—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.—In order that a shareholder may succeed in an action against directors of the company to recover damages on the ground that he had been induced to subscribe for the shares on the faith of a prospectus which did not, as required by section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, disclose particulars of a contract entered into by the company, he must prove, not merely that the omitted contract was a material one, but also that he has been damaged by the omission.

The mere fact that a material contract has not been disclosed in the prospectus raises no presumption of law that the plaintiff was induced by the omission to take his shares, or would not have taken them if the contract had been disclosed.

Per Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.—In order to succeed the plaintiff in such an action must prove that he would not have applied for the shares if the contract had been disclosed.

Per Romer, L.J.—In order to succeed in such an action the plaintiff must prove that if the omitted contract had been disclosed he might not have applied for the shares.

20. Receiver and manager—Debenture-holders' action—Express authority to borrow—Borrowing beyond amount authorized—Right to indemnity out of assets—Rights of creditors of the receiver and manager.—W. was appointed receiver and manager of the undertaking and property of a company in an ordinary debenture-holders' action, and by an order of the court he was authorized to borrow on mortgage of the assets of the company a sum not exceeding £3,000 and interest. W. carried on the business and borrowed the £3,000 for the purpose from his bankers, B. & Co. In addition, and without any further authority from the court for the same purpose, he borrowed £1,500 more from his bankers, and also incurred debts and liabilities to other creditors. The company was in course of liquidation under an order of the court. W. became bankrupt, and a new manager was appointed. The creditors of W., in right of his indemnity, claimed to be paid out of the assets of the company in priority of the claims of the debenture-holders.

Held, that the order authorizing the limited borrowing was intended to limit the general authority of W. to borrow as such manager, and that, having incurred liabilities exceeding that limit without having obtained the previous authority of the court, he was not entitled to be indemnified against them unless he could show that, having regard to all the circumstances under which they were incurred, he was justified in incurring them without first obtaining leave; that what circumstances would justify the conduct of a manager in so increasing such liabilities without leave could not be defined in general terms, except that it would not be enough to show that the expenses or liabilities were incurred bonâ fide and in the ordinary course of business; and consequently the claims of the creditors were referred to the registrar to be examined, having regard to the above declaration.—BRITISH POWER, TRACTION, AND LIGHTING CO., RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 387; [1906] 1 Ch. 497; 75 L. J. Ch. 248; 94 L. T. 479.

21. Reconstruction—Amalgamation—Memorandum of association—Reconstruction under power in memorandum—Sale of assets for shares in new company—partly-paid shares—Distribution of consideration—Offer of shares to all shareholders.—One of the objects of a company was to sell and dispose of its property for such consideration as it thought fit, and in particular for shares fully or partly paid up, and to divide the consideration amongst the members of the company. This power was to be exercisable either in view of a winding-up of the company or not. Another object was to distribute any of the assets of the company among the members of the company.

The company agreed to sell its assets and undertaking to another company. By the agreement the vendor company was to be wound up; part of the consideration was to consist of partly-paid shares to be allotted to the vendor company or its nominees. The vendor company were within two calendar months to find people to take up these shares, and if any of them were not taken up they were to be at the disposal of the purchasing company, and the vendor company was not to be liable to take them itself. Resolutions were passed and confirmed at meetings of the vendor company to wind up that company voluntarily, and that the liquidator should offer the new shares to the members at the rate of one such share for each share held by the members.

By the amalgamation scheme it was provided that the liquidator should sell shares which were not accepted by the shareholders and distribute the net proceeds of sale among such members. A shareholder in the vendor company objected to these proposals.

Held, that the proposed scheme of reconstruction was within the powers conferred by the memorandum, and ought to be allowed to proceed.—FULLER v. WHITE FEATHER REWARD (LIMITED), Ch.D. Warrington, J.; [1906] 1 Ch. 823; 75 L. J. Ch. 393.

22. Reconstruction—Memorandum of association—Sale of property of company to new company for partly paid-up shares—Winding up—Option to shareholders of old company to take up new shares—Time limit for exercising option—Realization by liquidator of shares not taken up—Division of proceeds among dissentient shareholders—Scheme held ultra vires.—The defendant company, being in financial difficulties and desiring to raise more capital, proposed to enter into an agreement with a new company for the sale of its property and undertaking to that company in consideration of partly-paid shares therein, and the shareholders of the old company were to have the option of taking those shares in exchange for their existing shares. Shares not accepted within a certain time were to be sold by the liquidator, and the proceeds, after paying expenses, divided rateably among the shareholders, who would, had they claimed, have been entitled to those shares. By its memorandum of association the company was empowered to sell its undertaking for shares in any other company, whether wholly or partly paid up, and to distribute the shares in specie. A shareholder in the old company brought an action to obtain a declaration that the agreement was ultrà vires and void, and also for an injunction to restrain the company from carrying into effect any agreement in the terms of the draft agreement.

Held, that the draft agreement was ultrà vires, as not being a sale justified by the provisions of the memorandum, and as being in substance an attempt to force the shareholders to provide more capital under penalty of forfeiting their shares.

Held, that an order confirming the reduction could be made, although the £1 10s. per share had not been returned, and that the proper minute to approve for registration was one which, after stating the reduced capital, contained the words "at the time of the registration of this minute the sum of £1 and no more is proposed to be deemed to have been paid up on each share."

In such a case the proper method of proceeding is (1) to allow the petition to stand over till evidence has been produced that the capital to be paid off has actually been returned to the shareholders; and (2) then to post-date the order confirming the reduction and approving of a minute showing, with respect to the capital as altered by the order, the particulars required by section 15 of the Companies Act, 1867.

But where a vendor sold property to a company upon the faith of a document given to him by the officials of the company, which purported to be a copy of a resolution of the directors duly and regularly passed, the company cannot afterwards be heard to say that the proper formalities had not been complied with, and that the alleged resolution was invalid, there being nothing to put the vendor on inquiry.

26. Shares — Equitable title — Notice — Right to registration—Negligence—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 46, r. 3.—A debtor, after assigning all his property by deed to trustees for his creditors, fraudulently sold certain shares through a broker and received the purchase-money from him. The companies concerned, having previously received notice of the assignment, refused to issue certificates to the purchasers, and the selling broker, under the rules of the Stock Exchange, provided other shares in substitution.

Held, that the failure of the trustees to serve, under ord. 46, r. 3, notice in lieu of distringas on the companies did not amount to negligence so as to postpone their equitable title, having regard to the fact that the trustees had given notice of the deed of assignment; and that the selling broker had no lien on the shares for the purchase-money, except possibly on the debtor's interest in them, which was subject to the deed of assignment.—PEAT v. CLAYTON, *Ch.D. 29. Shares—Transfer—Blank transfer — Implied contract by transferor.—There is an implied obligation on the part of a transferor of shares to do nothing to prevent his transferee getting the benefit of the transfer. W., a shareholder in a company, handed the certificate of the shares and a blank transfer to H. to enable him to raise a loan. H. endeavoured to raise the loan from the plaintiff. The plaintiff declined to advance the money personally, but he found a bank who were willing to advance it to him on his personal security. H. thereupon authorized the plaintiff to raise a loan on the security of the shares, and undertook to indemnify him against loss. In pursuance of this authority the plaintiff handed the share certificate and transfer to the bank, and received from them the amount of the loan, which he paid to H. The bank filled in the name of the plaintiff as transferee, and lodged the certificate and transfer for registration with the company. The company informed W., who notified them that the transfer was irregular. By reason of such notification the company declined to proceed with the transfer, and it was not completed till the shares had fallen very considerably in value. H. became bankrupt and never repaid the plaintiff any portion of the loan, all of which had eventually to be repaid by the plaintiff to the bank.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages as against W. for breach of the implied obligation on W.'s part to do nothing to prevent or delay the registration of the shares, the measure of such damages being the difference between the amount the plaintiff might reasonably have obtained by realizing the shares at the time of the breach and their actual value of the date when he obtained registration.—HOOPER v. 30. Shares—Transfer—Indemnity—Forged transfer of stock—Innocent transferee—Loss incurred by company—Registration of transfer—Liability as between company and transferee.—A request to a person to carry out some statutory or ministerial duty, apparently legal, implies an undertaking to hold him free from loss occasioned by his thus complying with his supposed duty.

The respondents presented what purported to be a transfer of the Sheffield Corporation Stock to the appellants, requesting them to register it in the name of their nominee. This was done, all parties acting innocently and without negligence. Subsequently the supposed transfer was found to be a forgery, and the corporation had to make good (there were new purchasers on the register) the loss to the real owners of the stock.

Held, that the respondents were liable to indemnify the corporation, as there was an implied contract to that effect.

A receiver had not been appointed. All the assets were charged by the debentures. The balance-sheet showed a surplus available for unsecured creditors. A judgment creditor presented a petition to have the company wound up by the court compulsorily.

Held, that, assuming that the assets were insufficient to satisfy the claims of the debenture-holders, the court was entitled to exercise the discretion vested in it under section 79 of the Companies Act, 1862, and wind up a company so conducted. The court, however, was not satisfied on the evidence that the order would be barren, and ordered the company to be wound up.—MELSON & Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 468; [1906] 1 Ch. 841; 75 L. J. Ch. 509; 94 L. T. 641.

34. Winding up—Not entitled to commence business—Contracts preliminary to carrying on business—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48). s. 6 (3).—All contracts entered into by a company formed since 1900 are, under section 6 (3) of the Companies Act, 1900, provisional, and not binding until the company becomes entitled to commence business; and there is no distinction, for the purposes of the section, between preliminary contracts entered into for the purpose of future business and others. Therefore a person who has bought goods and paid expenses on behalf of a company formed in 1905, which went into liquidation without having become entitled to commence business, has no claim as a creditor upon the company.—OTTO ELECTRICAL MANUFACTURING Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 601.

35. Winding up—Petition standing over—Undertaking "not to wind up voluntarily."—Where a petition to wind up a company is ordered to stand over by consent on the terms of what is known as "St. Thomas' Dock Order," the undertaking by the company should not be that it will not consent to an order on another petition and will not wind up voluntarily, but should follow the wording of the judgment of Jessel, M.R., in In re St. Thomas' Dock Co., 34 L. T. Rep. 228, 2 Ch. Div. 116, and be an undertaking that the company will not consent to a winding-up order on the petition of another person, or to a voluntary winding up.

Semble, that a corporation cannot validly undertake not to wind up voluntarily.—ST. NEOTS WATER Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 93 L. T. 788.

36. Winding up—Statutory affidavit—Petitioner abroad—Power of attorney—Affidavit of attorney—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903.—It is not a fatal objection to a petition to wind up a company that the affidavit verifying it has been made by some one other than the petitioner, rule 29 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, being merely directory in this respect; and the court can accept any affidavit sufficient according to the ordinary practice as sufficient for the purpose. Therefore where the petitioner was resident in the Transvaal Colony, and the affidavit was made by a person resident in this country who knew the facts of the case better than the petitioner, and who was acting under a power of attorney for the petitioner, the affidavit was accepted.

COMPROMISE:—

Practice—Co-plaintiffs—Striking out one of co-plaintiffs—Stay of proceedings—Discretion of court.—A co-plaintiff who has compromised with the defendants has no absolute right to have his name struck out. In a proper case his name will be struck out and added as a defendant upon security being given for the costs of the defendants. On an application by two defendants to strike out the name of one of three co-plaintiffs on the ground that she had entered into a compromise with them, the order was refused by the court.

CONTEMPT OF COURT:—

Attachment—Newspaper—Publication tending to prejudicial trial—Publication prior to commital to quarter sessions or assize court—Publication after committal to quarter sessions.—The King's Bench Division of the High Court has a summary jurisdiction to attach for a contempt of court in respect of the publication of matter calculated to prejudice the fair trial in an inferior court, not only when, prior to committal, it is uncertain whether in the event of a committal the case will be sent to quarter sessions or the assize court, but also when the publication complained of is after committal to the quarter sessions.

CONTRACT:—

1. Breach—Accord and satisfaction—Cheque—Evidence.—The defendant company entered into a scheme with their customers whereby they undertook to distribute annually for four years from April, 1902, among such of their customers as came into the scheme, their entire net profits on goods sold in the United Kingdom; and, in addition, for such years to distribute to those customers a bonus of £200,000 per annum, or £50,000 each quarter, the share of each customer to be in proportion to his purchases from the company in each year and quarter respectively.

After one payment of the quarterly bonus had been made, the defendant company on the 27th of September, 1902, sold their business and went into voluntary liquidation. The second quarter having elapsed, the liquidator of the company sent to the plaintiffs a cheque payable to order with a covering letter which described the cheque as being "your share of the second and final bonus distribution of Ogdens (Limited) for the quarter ending the 20th of September last, at which date the company ceased to carry on business." On the face of the cheque were printed the words, "The receipt at the back hereof must be signed, which signature will be taken as an indorsement of the cheque." On the back of the cheque were printed the words, "Received from Mr. Joseph Hood, liquidator of Ogdens (Limited), this cheque for £ , being my share of the second and final bonus distribution of the company."

This cheque was received, signed, and cashed by the plaintiffs.

In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages from the company for breaches of their contract under the bonus scheme, a preliminary point of law was set down for argument, whether the acceptance of the cheque by the plaintiffs operated in law as a waiver and discharge of any further claim against the company under its bonus scheme.

Held, affirming the decision of A. T. Lawrence, J. (reported 93 L. T. Rep. 553), that there was no evidence to justify a finding of accord and satisfaction of the claim for damages.—NATHAN v. OGDENS, C.A.; 94 L. T. 126.

2. Breach — Penalty — Liquidated damages — "Actual cost" of construction of line—Interest.—The criterion of whether a sum stipulated for on the breach of a contract is "liquidated damages" with which the court will not interfere, or a "penalty" which covers the damage, if proved, but does not assess it, is to be found in whether the sum so stipulated for can or cannot be regarded as a genuine pre-estimate of the creditor's probable or possible interest in the due performance of the principal obligation. Therefore where a contract with a Colonial Government for the construction of a railway, to be paid for in instalments as the work proceeded, empowered the Government to retain 10 per cent. of the instalments as they fell due, to be forfeited to the Government "as and for liquidated damages" in case of the non-completion of the line.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the sums so retained were of the nature of a penalty, not liquidated damages.

The contract provided that in the event of the line not being completed the contractor should be paid "the actual cost" of the incomplete line.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that he was not entitled to interest on the amount.—PUBLIC WORKS COMMISSIONER v. HILLS, P.C.; [1906] A. C. 368; 94 L. T. 833.

3. Damages — Forfeiture of sum deposited — Liquidated damages or penalty.—In deciding whether a sum made payable by way of compensation for breach of a contract is to be treated as liquidated damages or as a penalty, the court must take all the circumstances into consideration, in order to ascertain the intention of the parties. The fact that the sum in question is to be paid on the breach of any one of a variety of stipulations of different degrees of importance does not necessarily oblige the court to treat it as a penalty, although it raises a presumption that that was the intention of the parties; nor does the fact that the sum in question had been deposited at the making of the contract compel the court to treat it as liquidated damages, although it forms a material element to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the intention of the parties.—PYE v. BRITISH

AUTOMOBILE COMMERCIAL SYNDICATE (LIMITED), K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 425; 75 L. J. K. B. 270.

4. Hiring for a year—Right to continue—Three months' notice.—By an agreement the plaintiffs agreed to let and one E. agreed to hire two carriage horses by the year from a certain date at £105 per annum, payment to be made quarterly. It was also provided: "After the expiration of the first year the hiring can be terminated by either party giving one quarter's written notice from a quarter day."

Held, that the hiring was for one year certain, with a right to keep the horses after the end of the year, and then to terminate the contract by a quarter's notice.—TILLING v. JAMES, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 823.

5. Illegality—Probate action—Costs to be paid out of the estate—Legality of contract.—A plaintiff in a probate action entered into an agreement with the two defendants (one of whom was an infant) that whichever of the two wills in dispute was established the costs of both parties to the suit as between solicitor and client should be paid out of the estate, whether the court so ordered or not. At the trial the defendant succeeded, but the court refused to sanction the agreement on behalf of the infant defendant and ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of both parties to the suit. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action upon the agreement against the adult defendant to recover the costs which the plaintiff had been ordered to pay in the probate action.

Held, that the above agreement was not void as being against the policy of the law in that it intended to affect the administration of justice, and that it was enforceable as against the defendant, who was sui juris.—PRINCE v. HAWORTH, K.B.D., 249; [1905] 2 K. B. 768; 75 L. J. K. B. 92; 92 L. T. 773.

6. Performance impossible—Cheque given as part payment—Express provision if caterer incurred no expense.—The appellant agreed with respondent to supply refreshments at a fixed tariff on board a pleasure steamer on the occasion of a naval review to be held on the 28th of June, £300 to be paid on account on the Monday before the review. In accepting the contract the respondents wrote, on the 23rd of June, "It is, of course, understood that in the event of the cancellation of the review before any expense is incurred by the caterer there shall be no liability on our side," and a cheque for £300 was duly sent in part payment of the contract. The appellant spent nothing on refreshments, and there was no dispute as to any initial outlay by the caterer. The next day the review was cancelled, and the respondents stopped payment of the cheque.

Held, that the respondents were not liable and could not be sued on the cheque.—ELLIOTT v. CRUTCHLEY, H.L., 349; [1906] A. C. 7; 75 L. J. K. B. 147; 94 L. T. 5.

CONVERSION:—

Property passing—Measure of damages.—H. was a shipowner, and L. loaded a quantity of barley on his ship and received bills of lading. The ship was unable to load the whole of the barley, and L. agreed to indemnify the holder of the bills of lading. One bill of lading came into the hands of B., who handed it to M., and M. advanced £5,057 16s. 4d. upon it. M. received less than the quantity of barley covered by his bill of lading, as the holders of the other bills took delivery first from the agents of H., and he called upon B. to make good the deficiency, which he did by making certain payments and delivering some barley. M. sold the barley, and rendered B. an account showing a balance remaining due on the transaction from B. of £12 1s. 9d. Afterwards B. failed, owing M. some £1,651.

Held, that, as between M. and H., M. had the full property in the barley covered by his bill of lading, and that H. had been guilty of a conversion, but that M. could only recover £12 1s. 9d. as damages.—MONTGOMERY v. HUTCHINS, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 207.

CONVICT:—

Estate tail—Administrator—Power to disentail—Alienation—Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), ss. 8. 10, 12—Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 15, 40.—Section 10 of the Forfeiture Act, 1870, vests all the convict's property in the administrator upon his appointment for all the estate and interest of the convict therein, and section 12 gives the administrator absolute power to sell, convey, and transfer such property.

W. died on the 17th of July, 1888, having by his will, which was duly proved on the 31st of December, 1888, devised a freehold rent-charge of £300 for an estate tail to T.

On the 15th of March, 1905, T. was convicted of a felony, and G. was duly appointed administrator for the purposes of the Forfeiture Act, 1870, of the property of T

By a deed dated the 5th of July, 1905, and duly enrolled, G. purported to bar the estate tail and to grant the rent-charge, of which he was then tenant in tail, to the use of himself.

In November, 1905, G. contracted to sell the fee simple in the property to W.

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J.), that what was vested in the convict was an estate in fee determinable by the entry of issue, and the administrator had no power to convey the fee.

Held, also, that if the convict executed a deed simply granting the property to a grantee and his heirs, to hold to the grantee and his heirs to the use of himself, his heirs and assigns, this would not be an "alienation" within section 8 of the Forfeiture Act of 1870, and on this deed being enrolled the fee simple would vest in the administrator under section 10, and he could make a good title.—GASKELL AND WALTERS' CONTRACT, RE, C.A.; [1906] 2 Ch. 1; 75 L. J. Ch. 503; 94 L. T. 658.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. Letters—Publication after death of author—Restraint of publication—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 3.—Under section 3 of the Copyright Act, 1842, the copyright in a book published after the death of the author belongs to the proprietor of the author's manuscript from which such book shall be first published.

Held, that the proprietor of the author's manuscript means the proprietor of the piece of paper that is written upon.

S. E. & Co. purchased from S. the exclusive right to publish certain letters written by C. Lamb; S. was a descendant of the person to whom the letter were sent. S. E. & Co. published these letters in a book, and also gave an exclusive licence to M. & Co. to publish them. Subsequently J. M. D. & Co. purchased the actual letters from S. and published them also.

Held, that S. E. & Co. had acquired the copyright in the letters, as they were the assignees of

S., who had the right to publish them under section 3 of the Copyright Act, 1842; that S. E. & Co. were the proprietors of the author's manuscript, from which their book was first published, and that J. M. D. & Co. accordingly had no right to publish the letters.—MACMILLAN v. DENT, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 262; [1906] 1 Ch. 101; 75 L. J. Ch. 99; 94 L. T. 84.

CORONER:—

Inquest in prison—Duty of coroner in holding—Death of prisoner caused by wound inflicted before admission to prison—Previous investigation by magistrates on charge of assault—Duty of coroner to hold full inquiry after previous investigation—Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), ss. 3, 4, 6.—When an inquest is held by a coroner in a prison upon the body of a person who has died within the prison, it is the duty and obligation of the coroner to make as full and complete an inquiry touching the death of the deceased as in the case of an ordinary inquest outside the prison; and his duty of making inquiry does not necessarily terminate when the jury have found that no one in the prison is to blame for such death.

If the inquest be upon a prisoner who has died within the prison from the effects of a wound inflicted upon him before his admission to the prison, and if the circumstances under which the wound was inflicted upon the deceased have been previously idvestigated by magistrates on a charge and cross-charge of assault, and the magistrates have found that the prisoner was the aggressor and was alone to blame and have sentenced him to imprisonment in respect of such assault, the fact of such previous investigation by the magistrates, and their finding that the prisoner was alone to blame for the injury inflicted upon himself, does not exonerate the coroner from the obligation of holding as full an inquiry into the circumstances under which the wound which caused the death of the deceased was inflicted as if no such investigation by the magistrates had taken place.—REX v. GRAHAM, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 371.

CORPORATION:—

1. Highway—Alteration and making up by local authority—Orders for payment of money—Wasteful, extravagant, and unnecessary expenditure—Public road adapted for motor-car racing—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 149—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 141. —The court ordered a certiorari to issue to bring up and quash a resolution of a municipal corporation for the payment by the treasurer of two several sums of £2,500 and £550 to the Public Works Committee, which sums had been expended on paving a road in the borough with tarmac, on the grounds that the expenditure was wasteful, extravagant, and unnecessary, and therefore illegal, the money not having been bonâ fide expended for the repair of the road, but solely for the purpose of enabling the motor-car trials of the Automobile Club to be held there.—REX v. BRIGHTON CORPORATION, K.B.D., 539.

2. Municipal corporation—Borrowing powers—Ultrà vires—Interest on overdraft at bankers—Liability of borough treasurer—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 18-21, 25-28, 139-144—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 6, 189, 198, 209, 210, 233-237, 245-247, 265—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—A municipal corporation had overdrafts on various accounts at the bank beyond their statutory powers of borrowing. The defendant, who was the borough treasurer, and also the manager of the said bank, by the authority of the corporation, credited himself and debited the corporation with interest on such overdrafts at 4½ per cent., with quarterly rests.

Held, that the defendant was not entitled to credit himself or to debit any of the borough funds with interest on any of the overdrafts appearing in the accounts theretofore put in by him as treasurer since his appointment.

Held, also, that the borough were not necessary parties to the action.

Held, further, that though the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, has provided a remedy by certiorari, or an appeal against the rate, there is nothing in the Act to deprive the Attorney-General, at the relation of a party interested, of the power of obtaining by injunction an order to restrain the payment of money being made under an order of the borough council, for which order there was no legal warrant.

Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General, [1899] A. C. 293, 47 W. R. Dig. 43, followed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DE WINTON, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 499; [1906] 2 Ch. 106; 75 L. J. Ch. 612.

3. Municipal corporation—Statutory powers—Tramway business—Common carrier—Incidental powers—Ultrà vires—General Tramway Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78)—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 86—Manchester Southern Tramways Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. cxciii.)—Manchester Corporation Tramways Act, 1889 (62 & 63 Vict. c. cclv.).—The defendants were incorporated by Royal Charter and subject to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The Manchester Corporation Act, 1899, enabled the Manchester Corporation to run carriages and take tolls on all the network of tramways mentioned therein, and to use such tramways for the purpose of carrying passengers and of conveying and delivering animals, goods, minerals, and parcels.

Held, it was not ultrà vires for the corporation to deliver by cart or otherwise at the consignee's house or to any other place authorized by him, including the station of a railway company, such goods as they have brought on their tram lines, such delivery being fairly incidental to their authorized business. There was nothing in the Acts relating to the Manchester Corporation which authorized them to act as carriers generally without reference to their tramways. The defendants were not entitled to expend money for the purpose of establishing or maintaining or carrying on the business of carriers, except as part of or in connection with their tramway undertaking, and in respect of articles carried along all or part of the tramways.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MANCHESTER CORPORATION, *Ch.D. COSTS.—See Bankruptcy, 5, 8; Practice, 1, 3-7; Ship, 25; Solicitor, 2-7.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Costs—Counsel's fees—Application for certificate not made at trial—"Good cause"—Mere omission to ask for certificate—Right to make application under "liberty to apply"—County Court Rules, 1903, ord. 53, r. 7.—Ord. 53, r. 7, of the County Court Rules, 1903, provides that the application for the allowance by the judge of certain items of costs therein specified, including amongst others counsel's fees in certain cases, shall be made "at or immediately after the trial or hearing; and if not so made shall not afterwards be entertained, unless the judge for good cause otherwise orders."

Held, that the mere neglect or omission to ask for the allowance of these costs at or immediately after the trial is not "good cause" within the meaning of the rule; and if the successful party merely through forgetfulness omits to ask for such costs at the time, the judge has no jurisdiction afterwards to entertain an application for the allowance of such costs.

Held, further, that there is no power to make a subsequent application for the allowance of such costs under a general liberty to apply given to the parties at the time of the trial.—MORLEY v. BEVINGTON, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 768.

2. Execution—Claim to goods—Deposit of amount of value—Withdrawal of bailiff—Order for sale—Retaking possession.—Held, that if the amount deposited by the claimant with the bailiff was not the value of the goods his withdrawal from possession was wrongful, and the county court judge had power in that case to order him to retake possession, and that the case must go back to the county court judge to determine whether an order for sale ought to be made.—MILLER v. SOLOMON, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 91.

3. Judge—Deputy—Appointment of two deputies—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 18-21.—A county court judge is not appointed to a circuit, but to different courts with a district, and has power therefore under sections 18 to 21 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to appoint a separate deputy to each court district within his jurisdiction.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 410, [1906] 1 K. B. 22) affirmed, Moulton, L.J., dubitante.—REX v. LLOYD, C.A., 464; [1906] 1 K. B. 552; 75 L. J. K. B. 406; 94 L. T. 498.

4. Notice of special defence—Statute—County Court Rules, 1903, ord. 10, r. 18.—By ord. 10, r. 18, of the County Court Rules, where a defendant relies on a statutory defence he shall in his statement set forth the year, chapter, and section of the statute in the short title, and the particular matter on which he relies, "or otherwise sufficiently indicate the nature of the defence on which he relies."

In an action the defendant pleaded that the action was "null and void, and the defendant relies on the Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18)."

As a matter of fact he should have pleaded the Gaming Act, 1892.

Held, that there had been a sufficient indication of the defence within the rule.—RENTON v. KING, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 10.

5. Practice—Right to reply.—If the defendant calls evidence to support his defence, the defendant has the right to reply in the county court, following the practice observed in the High Court.—CLACK v. CLACK, K.B.D., 375; [1906] 1 K. B. 483; 75 L. J. K. B. 274; 94 L. T. 516.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Attempt—Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), ss. 14, 18.—The Offences Against the Person Act, 1861, s. 14: "Whosoever shall shoot at any person or shall by drawing a trigger or in any other manner attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person with intent in any of the cases aforesaid to commit murder shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony." Section 18: "Whosoever shall maliciously shoot at any person, or by drawing a trigger or in any other manner attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person with intent in any of the cases aforesaid to do some grievous bodily harm to any person, shall be guilty of felony." To commit an offence under these sections it is not sufficient to intend to shoot or to make preparations to shoot, but there must be "an attempt," an act in a series of acts which, if not interrupted, would lead to the commission of the crime.

A. was seen to put his hand in his pocket and draw out a loaded revolver; B. caught his arm after the revolver was clear from his pocket, a struggle ensued, and finally B. wrenched the revolver from B. During the struggle A. said repeatedly to B., "You've got to die."

Held, that A. was rightly convicted of the offence of attempting to discharge loaded arms.—REX v. LINNEKER, C.C.R., 494; [1906] 2 K. B. 99; 75 L. J. K. B. 385; 94 L. T. 856.

2. Conspiracy—Agreement by prisoner with another to do an unlawful act for which the other could not be prosecuted—Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 56.—The prisoner D. was convicted on an indictment which charged him with unlawfully conspiring with F. M. C., between the 1st of August and the 4th of November, 1905, by force or fraud to take or decoy away A. M. C., a child under the age of fourteen years, with intent to deprive her lawful guardian, C. J. L., of the possession of the said child. The said F. M. C. was the mother of the child. She had obtained a divorce from her husband, and by an order of the court, dated the 5th of August, 1902, the said C. J. L. had been appointed guardian of the person of the child. In August, 1905, the prisoner, by an agreement between him and F. M. C. undertook to take the child by force or fraud out of C. J. L.'s possession, and he did certain acts for the purpose of carrying out that undertaking.

Held, that whether F. M. C. was or was not protected by the proviso from a prosecution for an offence prohibited by section 56, or for a conspiracy to commit such an offence, her immunity could not afford any protection to the prisoner who had unlawfully conspired with her that he should commit an offence under the section.—REX v. DUGUID, C.C.R.; 75 L. J. K. B. 470; 94 L. T. 887.

3. Conspiracy—Indictment—Acts tending to public mischief—Obtaining a passport by false pretences.—Two defendants were found guilty on an indictment which alleged that they unlawfully conspired together to obtain a passport in the name of one defendant for the use of another defendant, to the injury and prejudice of the lawful, free, and customary intercourse existing between inhabitants of this country and of Russia, to the public mischief of the subjects and the endangerment of the continuance of peaceful relations existing between the King and the Czar and their subjects. On a motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the obtaining of a passport by false representation was not a criminal act,

Held, that the indictment was good.

At the trial the judge directed the jury that if they found that the defendants did conspire together to obtain a passport by false representation, and that they knew it was to be used by someone else, that those acts constituted a criminal offence.

Held, that the direction was right.—REX v. BRAILSFORD, K.B.D., 283; [1905] 2 K. B. 730; 75 L. J. K. B. 64; 93 L. T. 401.

4. Cruelty to animals—Causing animal to be cruelly ill-treated — Performance with savage animals — Bringing tame animal in contact with wild animals—Tame animal attacked and injured—Conviction—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), s. 2.—The appellant, a lion-tamer, conducted performances in a cage with lions, and part of the performance consisted of a roundabout of six boats, in each of which was seated a lion, the roundabout being drawn by a pony. At one of these performances, after the appellant had introduced the pony into the cage and attached it to the roundabout, one of the lions jumped out of its boat and raised itself on to the hindquarters of the pony and sniffed at it. The appellant drove the lion back to its boat, but immediately the appellant's attention was diverted from the lion it attacked the pony, causing injuries from which the pony died two days afterwards. A considerable number of performances with the same pony had taken place for several years, and nothing of the kind had happened. Formerly during the performance three or four men with iron bars kept watch on the stage, and recently a man with a fire hose kept watch. The appellant having been convicted, under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, of having unlawfully and cruelly caused the pony to be ill-treated,

Held, that there was sufficient evidence of mens rea on the part of the appellant to justify the conviction, and that the conviction was right.—THIELBAR v. CRAIGEN, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 600.

5. Cruelty to animals—One act—Conviction for cruelty to several animals—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), ss. 2, 29.—A conviction under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, for having cruelly ill-treated five cows by causing them to be overstocked with milk, was appealed against on the ground that the conviction was bad on its face, in that it was a conviction for five separate and distinct offences.

Held, that an act or omission affecting several animals might constitute one offence under the section, and that it was not necessary that there should be a separate summons and separate conviction in respect of each animal.—REX v. CABLE, K.B.D., 626; [1906] 1 K. B. 719; 75 L. J. K. B. 381; 94 L. T. 772.

6. Evidence—Medical practitioner—Illegal use of instruments—Admissibility of evidence of felonious use of similar instruments on another woman some nine months before—"Mistake" or "accident"—Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 58.—The prisoner, a medical man, was indicted for feloniously using certain instruments on a certain woman with intent to procure her miscarriage. At the trial the prosecution called as a witness another woman, whose evidence was to the effect that some nine months previously the prisoner had used similar instruments on her, with the avowed intention of bringing about her miscarriage, and that he had then used expressions tending to show that he was in the habit of performing similar operations for the same illegal purpose. The evidence was admitted, and the prisoner was convicted

Held (by Kennedy, Darling, Jelf, Bray, and A. T. Lawrence, JJ., Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., dissenting), that the evidence was rightly admitted, and the conviction must be upheld.—REX v. BOND, C.C.R., 586.

7. Falsification of an account—Employer's account—Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1.—By the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24): "Whereas it is expedient to amend the law so as to punish the falsification by clerks, officers, servants, and others of their employers' accounts, books, writings, or documents: Be it enacted . . . (1) That if any clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of clerk, officer, or servant shall wilfully and with intent to defraud, destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify any book, paper, writing, valuable security, or account which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or shall wilfully and with intent to defraud, make, or concur in making any false entry in, or omit or alter or concur in omitting or altering any material particular from or in any such book or an document or account, then in every such case the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemesnour.

Held, that in the second part of the section the word "such" governed not only "book," but also the subsequent words "document or account," and in consequence it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the account alleged to have been falsified "belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for and on behalf of his employer.—REX v. PALIN, C.C.R., 396; [1906] 1 K. B. 7; 75 L. J. K. B. 15; 93 L. T. 673.

8. Libel — Criminal information — Libel upon persons discharging public duties imposed by statute—Committee acting under Licensing Act, 1904—Libel upon—Jurisdiction of court to grant criminal information.—The remedy of criminal information for a libel is not confined to cases of libel upon persons acting in a judicial capacity while discharging judicial duties; but the court can in its discretion grant a criminal information for the protection of persons who are discharging public duties imposed upon them by statute, in respect of a libel published of them in the exercise of those duties.

Accordingly, if a libel is published in a newspaper concerning the members of a committee of justices appointed under the Licensing Act, 1903, by the quarter sessions or the general body of justices in a county borough, to carry out the provisions of that Act, and to decide as to the amount of compensation to be levied upon existing licences as a compensation fund for the extinction of other licences—the libel charging the members of that committee with being influenced by improper motives in fixing the amount of the levy—the court will grant a criminal information upon the ground that the committee are acting in the discharge of public duties imposed upon them by the Act, although they may not be acting in a strictly judicial capacity.—REX v. RUSSELL, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 407.

9. Obscene libel—"Obscene"—Sufficiency of indictment—"To the manifest corruption of the morals of his Majesty's subjects"—Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), s. 7.—In an indictment charging the publication of an obscene libel it is sufficient to aver that the publication is obscene, and that it has been unlawfully published. It is unnecessary to aver the "intent" by the use of a common form expression as "to the manifest corruption of the morals of his Majesty's subjects," although, in the opinion of the court, as a matter of practice it were more desirable to do so.

The object of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, s. 7, which provides that "It shall not be necessary to set out in any indictment . . . instituted against the publisher of any obscene libel the obscene passages, but it shall be sufficient to deposit the book . . . containing the alleged libel with the indictment or other judicial proceeding, together with particulars showing precisely by reference to pages, columns, and lines in what part of the book . . . the alleged libel is to be found, and such particulars shall be deemed to form part of the record . . . ," was to obviate the setting out of the matter by a clear reference to the document deposited. — REX v. BARRACLOUGH, C.C.R., 147; [1906] 1 K. B. 201; 75 L J. K. B. 77; 94 L. T. 111.

10. Wife stealing from husband—Receiving from wife—Felony—Misdemeanour—Sufficiency of averments in indictment—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s. 91—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 12, 16.—An indictment will lie for a common law misdemeanour in respect to the receiving of property stolen by a wife from her husband. It is not necessary (although better, per Channell, J.) in such an indictment to aver that the property was received from the wife.

CROWN:—

1. Postmaster-General—Liability to be sued in official capacity—Action for negligence of subordinate—Immunity of head of Government department—Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 42—Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 2.—The Postmaster-General is not liable to be sued in his official capacity for the negligence of a person employed in the telegraph service; his immunity from liability to an action for the default of a subordinate official in the Post Office not being affected by anything contained in the Telegraph Acts, 1863, 1868, and 1878. — BAINBRIDGE v. POSTMASTER-GENERAL, C.A., 221; [1906] 1 K. 2. Prerogative—Distress for rent—Chattels belonging to Crown seized on tenant's premises by landlord—Immunity from distraint of Crown chattels.—Chattels belonging to the Crown are exempt from liability to seizure by distress.

So held, reversing the decision of th county court judge in an action for damages for illegal distress of a horse, the property of the Crown, seized on a farm belonging to the defendant for rent due to her from the tenant, although only formal notice that the horse was Crown property had been given to the bailiff and to the auctioneer, and no legal proceedings in the nature of an extent had been instituted to establish the title of the Crown in the horse.—SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR v. WYNNE, K.B.D., 235; [1905] 2 K. CUSTOM:—

Validity—Legal origin—Presumption—Right of drying nets on seashore—Character of accreted land—Evidence—Reputation—Depositions—War Office map and chart in possession of Admiralty.—It is a valid custom for fishermen to dry their nets on land situate near the sea in the parish which they inhabit, nor will a modern method of drying invalidate the custom so long as no unreasonable burden is thereby cast on the land. Accreted land is subject to customs binding on the land to which it is accreted. A survey not intended to affect the royal revenues, but to serve temporary private purposes, is not admissible as a public document, nor is one made by a deceased officer in discharge of his duty, when it is not shown that it was his duty to make it. Maps and plans made by the Board of Ordnance in the seventeenth century are not admissible as public documents nor as evidence of reputation. A chart in the possession of the Admiralty, but not an Admiralty chart, is not admissible.

CY-PRÈS:—

Will—Real property limitations—Limitation to unborn person void for perpetuity—General intent.—A testator devised real estate to the use of F. G. for his life, remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively for life with remainder, after the death of each such son, to the use of his sons successively in tail male with remainder to the use of the daughters of the sons of F. G. in tail, as in the will mentioned, with remainder to the use of the daughters of F. G. in tail, as therein mentioned, with an ultimate remainder to F. G. in fee.

F. G. never had any children, and on his death the question arose whether, in view of the fact that some of the intervening limitations infringed the rule against perpetuities, the ultimate remainder was void.

It was admitted that the limitations after F. G.'s life estate were void under the rule; but it was suggested that the court could apply the cy-près doctrine and alter the limitations so as to give to the sons of F. G. estates in tail male severally and successively, with a contingent remainder if such sons should die without issue other than daughters or issue of daughters to each of such sons in tail general with remainder to the daughters of F. G. in tail general with an ultimate remainder to F. G. in fee.

Held, that, to allow the substitution of the suggested limitations would be a clear extension of the cy-près doctrine, which it had been laid down by the authorities—e.g., Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145, and Brudenell v. Elwes, 1 East 442, ought not to be extended; and that Nicholl v. Nicholl, 2 Wm. Bl. 1159, was not an authority upon which such an extension ought to be based.

DAMAGES:—

1. Breach of contract of carriage—Remoteness—Penalty clause in contract.—In an action for breach of contract to deliver goods, the measure of damages, setting aside all special damage, is the value of the goods at the place and time at which they ought to have been delivered to the owner.

The respondents had agreed by charter-party to load a cargo of goods of the appellants at a fixed time at a port in the Baltic for conveyance to Cardiff. They did not provide a ship as agreed, and the customers of the appellants, to whom they had sold the goods, bought goods against them, and recovered the price and expenses from the appellants. The charter-party contained a clause: "Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, estimated amount of freight on quantity not shipped in accordance herewith."

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the appellants were entitled to recover from the respondents the whole amount which they had been compelled to pay to their customers.—STRÖMS BRUKS AKTIE BOLAG v. HUTCHISON, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 515; 74 L. J. P. C. 130; 93 L. T. 562.

2. Measure of—Advance out of funds of company on fraudulent misrepresentations of director—Insufficient security—Difference between advance and value of security.—Where the directors of the plaintiff company had been induced by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the defendant, who was one of their number, to make an advance out of the funds of the plaintiff company on the security of a second debenture issued by another company in which the defendant was personally interested, and in the result the debenture proved to be an insufficient security, so that loss was occasioned to the plaintiff company, it was held that the measure of damages to which the plaintiff company was entitled was the difference between the money advanced by it and the value of the debenture at the date of issue.

3. Subsidence—Risk of future subsidence—Measure of damages.—In an action for damages for injury to cotton mills arising from subsidence occasioned by the past working of coal mines underneath the site of the mills, both parties consented to judgment directing an inquiry to ascertain the amount of the damages. That inquiry was referred, pursuant to section 13 of the Arbitration Act 1889, to an official referee, who assessed the necessary repairs at a certain amount, and the depreciation of the premises, including the risk of future damages, at a further amount. That latter amount the colliery owners disputed on the ground (inter alia) that the official referee, in estimating the same, had taken into consideration the risk of future subsidence.

Held (Romer, L.J., dissentiente), that the risk of future subsidence had been rightly taken into consideration by the official referee.

DEED:—

Execution — Alterations after execution — Blanks filled up—Date altered—Alteration immaterial—A deed was executed by all necessary parties other than B., whose signature was necessary for its validity. At the date of execution the date of the day and month were in blank, but the year 1899 was written in full. B. executed the deed some months later in 1900; the blanks were filled up and the year altered from 1899 to 1900.

Held, that the validity of the deed was unaffected by these alterations.

DISCOVERY:—

Practice—Interrogatories—Action of libel—Plea of privilege—Name of informant—Object of interrogatory.—Where in an action of libel the defendant pleads privilege, the plaintiff will not be allowed to interrogate the defendant as to the names of the persons on whose information the defendant published the words complained of, if it appears that the plaintiff's object is not to rebut the plea of privilege, but to obtain discovery which would enable him to bring actions against other persons.—EDMONDSON v. BIRCH, C.A., 52; [1905] 2 K. DISTRESS:—

1. Illegal distress—Trespass ab initio—Right of landlord to make fresh levy.—A landlord levied a distress for rent. The bailiff illegally entered the house by breaking the chain of the front door and seized furniture belonging to the plaintiff. . . . After remaining in possession some days he went out and was refused re-admission, and made no attempt to re-enter. Subsequently the landlord levied a fresh distress for the same rent, whereupon the plaintiff brought an action for replevin against him.

Held, affirming the decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 216), that the second distress was a legal distress.—GRUNNELL v. WELCH, C.A., 581.

2. Landlord and tenant—Implements of trade—"To the value of £5"—Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), s. 4—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 147.—A hired cab is an implement of trade.

Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, s. 4, provides: "From and after the passing of this Act the following goods and chattels shall be exempt from distress for rent—namely, any goods or chattels of the tenant or his family which would be protected from seizure in execution under section 96 of the County Court Acts, 1846, or any enactment amending or substituted for the same."

Section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888, the present operative section referred to in the above statute, provides: "Every bailiff . . . may seize and take any of the goods and chattels of such person (excepting . . . the tools and implements of his trade to the value of £5 which shall to that extent be protected from such seizure)."

Held, that if there be upon the premises only one implement of trade, and no other goods there, although its value exceeds £5 it cannot be distrained for rent, but comes within the protection of section 147 set out above.—LAVELL v.

3. Landlord and tenant—Lodger—Distraint of lodgers' goods—Action against bailiff—Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), s. 2.—Under section 2 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, an action lies against a bailiff for illegal distraint.

4. Landlord and tenant—Waiver of illegal levy—Owner of goods—Uncertificated bailiff—Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), s. 7.—Section 7 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, enacts: "From and after the commencement of this Act no person shall act as a bailiff to levy any distress for rent unless he shall be authorized to act as a bailiff by a certificate in writing under the hand of a county court judge . . . If any person not holding a certificate under this section shall levy a distress contrary to the provisions of this Act, the person so levying and any person who has authorized him so to levy shall be deemed to have committed a trespass."

Held, that the section constitutes a distress by an uncertificated bailiff an illegal act which inures for the benefit not only of the tenant but of third parties whose goods are on the demised premises.—PERRING v. EMERSON, K.B.D., 47; [1906] 1 K. B. 1; 75 L. J. K. B. 12; 93 L. T. 748.

DIVORCE:—

1. Adultery of petitioner—Discretion of court—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31.—The petitioner was an actress, and was at the time of her marriage sixteen years old and an orphan. The respondent seduced her and afterwards married her; he took her to various places and compelled her to obtain money by prostitution, he taking the money and ill-treating her. After about two years she ran away, and while away occasionally obtained money by prostitution, as she was destitute.

The Court held that the facts of the case justified it in pronouncing a decree in the petitioner's favour, notwithstanding her adultery.—DODSON v. DODSON, P.D., 220.

2. Adultery of petitioner—Discretion of court—Principles upon which the discretion is to be exercised—Material facts—Duty of petitioner to disclose material facts—Decree nisi refused—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31.—In the exercise of the discretion vested in the court by section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), where the petitioner has been found guilty of adultery, regard must be had not only to the persons who are parties to the suit, but also to the interests of society generally, and of public morality. Where it is proved that the petitioner has been guilty of adultery, it is not a sufficient excuse for his or her conduct to show that the adultery happened after the separation of the parties, and that the separation was caused entirely by the bad conduct of the respondent. Such adultery is a material fact which ought to be placed before the court, and the concealment of it is a fraud upon the court.

3. Claim for damages only—Practice—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 31, 33, 59.—A petition by a husband claiming damages only presented under section 33 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, is subject to the same provisions as other petitions presented under the same Act.—COX v. COX, P.D.; [1906] P. 267.

4. Desertion—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.—The wife prayed for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion. Prior to the commencement of the two years necessary to complete the defence of desertion within the meaning of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, the wife had obtained an order under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1895, directing that she should be no longer bound to cohabit with the respondent, on the ground that the respondent had been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance.

The Court held that, if the two years had not been completed prior to the making of the order of the court of summary jurisdiction, it would have had the effect of preventing the desertion from continuing after it. It dismissed the petition for divorce, on the ground that the wife had not proved a case of desertion, but adultery alone.

5. Desertion—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 27.—The court held that the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, with regard to desertion do not oust the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court with regard to desertion, and hence the matrimonial offence of desertion under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, may be committed nothwithstanding the existence of a separation order made under section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act.—SMITH v. SMITH, P.D., 220; [1905] P. 249; 74 L. J. P. 113; 93 L. T. 457.

6. Foreign court—Jurisdiction—Recognition by English courts—Domicil—Suppression of material fact—Validity of decree in England.—Where the parties to a marriage solemnized in England are afterwards domiciled in another country, the courts of that country have jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage, and on grounds which would not be sufficient for granting a divorce in England.

Harvey v. Farnie, 8 App. Cas. 43, and Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A. C. 517, applied.

The resolutions of the judges in Rex v. Lolley, Russ. & Ry. 237, must be treated as confined to the facts of that case.

A decree for dissolution of marriage, being a judgment affecting the status of the parties, stands on the same footing as a judgment in rem, and therefore such a decree granted by a foreign court cannot be impeached in this country while that judgment remains unreversed, by a person not a party to those proceedings, even on the ground of fraud.

In 1880 a marriage took place in England between two English people. In 1886 the husband petitioned for a divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery, and she presented a cross-petition charging him with cruelty. Both petititions were dismissed, the respective charges being both proved. In 1889 the husband went to New York, where he lived in adultery. The wife remained in England, and lived in adultery there until 1890, when she went to New York and obtained a decree from the court there for the dissolution of her marriage. The husband, who had then acquired a domicil in the State of New York, was served with process, but did not appear. The divorce proceedings in England were not disclosed to the American court, but there was no collusion between the husband and wife.

Held, that the wife must be taken to have adopted the husband's domicil in the State of New York for the purpose of the divorce proceedings; that the court of New York had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage; that the non-disclosure of the wife's adultery did not affect the jurisdiction; and therefore the decree of the New York court would be recognized and held valid in this country.

7. Foreign divorce — Foreign domicil — Domicil of husband—Decree of foreign court—Divorce decree recognized by State where husband domiciled—Recognition by English court—Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93), s. 1.—The English courts will recognize the validity of a decree of divorce pronounced in a State where the husband is not domiciled, if such decree is accepted as valid in the State where he is actually domiciled at the time of the pronouncement.—ARMITAGE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, P.D.; [1906] P. 135; 75 L. J. P. 42; 94 L. T. 614.

8. Husband's petition—Claim for damages—Assessment—Duty of jury.—Where a husband petitions for a divorce on the ground of the adultery of his wife with co-respondent, and a claim for damages is made against the latter, the jury are not bound to assess the damages at any sum, however small, if they are of opinion that the conduct of the parties disentitles the petitioner to any compensation, even though adultery is proved.—GIBSON v. GIBSON, P.D.; 94 L. 9. Nullity of marriage—Petition of husband—Non-consummation—Absence of cohabitation—Order for inspection—Refusal of respondent to comply with order—Presumption—Evidence of incapacity—Incapacity found as a fact.—Where there has been no cohabitation by the parties to a contract of marriage, and evidence has been adduced of a positive statement made by the respondent in a suit of nullity of marriage that she is incapable of consummating the marriage, these facts, taken in conjunction with the refusal of the respondent to submit to medical inspection when ordered by the court and the general circumstances of the case, are sufficient to entitle the court to find incapacity existing as a fact.

10. Restitution of conjugal rights—Judicial separation—Withdrawal from cohabitation—Just cause—Habitual drinking habit—Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 19), s. 3—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 5.—The wife instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and in answer the husband pleaded that he had just cause for his withdrawal from cohabitation, alleging that the wife was addicted to habits of intemperance to such an extent that she was a drunkard within the meaning of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, and the Licensing Act, 1902. The husband also prayed for a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty.

The court dismissed the wife's petition and refused the husband's cross-prayer.—BEER v. BEER, P.D., 564; 94 L. T. 704.

11. Settlements—Variation—Power of appointment—Power to appoint in case of second marriage—Interests under first marriage—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 5.—By a marriage settlement power was given to a husband, in the event of his surviving his wife, to appoint the capital of the fund which he brought into settlement by deed or by will as to two-thirds of the same in favour of a future wife and the issue of a future marriage. There was a child of the first marriage. The husband obtained a decree absolute for the dissolution of his marriage, and applied to have the settlement varied so as to give him power to settle the two-thirds at once in favour of his second wife and her issue. The court held that it had jurisdiction to make such an order, but under the circumstances of the case declined to make such order to the full extent during the lifetime of the divorced wife, and restricted the power of appointment to one-third of the capital of the trust fund.

In exercising its jurisdiction to vary settlements under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), the court will endeavour, where the application to vary is made by the innocent party, to place the parties in the position they would have occupied if the marriage had not been put an end to by the fault of one of them. But in all cases the claims of any existing issue of the first marriage who possess any rights under the settlement must be carefully considered.—HODGSON ROBERTS v. HODGSON ROBERTS, P.D.; [1906] P. 142; 75 L. J. P. 48; 94 L. T. 621.

12. Variation of settlement — Wife's adultery — Husband's adultery—Discretion of court—Conduct of parties—Interests of public morality—Retrospective order—Wife's protected life interest—Jurisdiction—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 45—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 3.—In exercising the discretionary jurisdiction of varying settlements, after a dissolution of marriage, conferred upon the court by the Matrimonial Causes Acts, regard is to be had both to the conduct of the parties and to the interests of society and public morality. Consequently, where the successful petitioner for dissolution of marriage has been guilty of flagrant misconduct, the court will take such misconduct into consideration on a subsequent application to vary the marriage settlements, and may decline to exercise its discretion by reason thereof. The Matrimonial Causes Acts do not give the court power to award anything in the nature of damages as between husband and wife, or to inflict any fine or penalty upon the party guilty of a matrimonial offence. The principle upon which the discretion of the court will be exercised is that the loss which a husband—if himself innocent—has sustained by reason of the misconduct of the guilty wife, may be repaired by giving him means to the scale of which he may have learnt to accommodate his mode of life. Though the desire to prevent a co-respondent profiting by his own iniquity may justify turning the scale against a guilty wife, this consideration is not to be carried to the extent of depriving her of everything beyond the bare necessities of life in the condition in which she has been brought up.

March v. March, 15 W. R. 799, L. R. 1 P. & M. 440, considered and applied.

The powers given to the court by section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, cannot be exercised retrospectively.

A wife's protected life interest—i.e., a life interest which is to cease upon the happening of certain events, cannot be dealt with by the court under the Matrimonial Causes Acts.—CONSTANTINIDI v. CONSTANTINIDI, C.A., 121; [1905] P. 253; 74 L. J. P. 122; 93 L. T. 651.

DOMICIL:—

Change of domicil—Evidence.—In order to establish that a man has acquired a new domicil, other than his domicil of origin, there must be evidence of a fixed determination to change his nationality.

In a case in which an Englishman, having a residence and large property in England, purchased an estate in Scotland and made it his principal place of residence for many years, up to his death, retaining also his English property, Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that such residence was not sufficient evidence to establish that he had lost his domicil of origin in England, and acquired a domicil of choice in Scotland.—HUNTLY v. GASKELL, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 56; 75 L. J. P. C. 1; 94 L. T. 33.

EDUCATION:—

1. Compensation—Transfer of powers of London School Board to London County Council—Officer of authority whose powers were not transferred—Direct pecuniary loss—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 120—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), Schedule II., rr. 16, 21.—Before the Education Act of 1902 came into force in London, the London School Board directed its precept for a rate to be levied for public education expenses to the Corporation of London. N. was at that time a collector for the Commissioners of Sewers, the rating authority for that corporation, and as such collected the education rate, and received for so doing a certain poundage on the amount collected. When the powers of the school board were transferred to the London County Council the education rate was collected with the poor rate. N., having by the change lost the poundage which he formerly earned, claimed compensation under rule 21 of Schedule II. of the Education Act, 1902, and section 120 of the Local Government Act, 1888, from the London County Council.

Held (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., Darling, J., dissenting), that compensation could not be claimed, because N. was not in the employment of the authority whose powers had been transferred to the London County Council under the change brought by the Education Act, 1902, nor under the Local Government Act, 1888.—REX v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 439; [1906] 1 K. 2. Local authority—Education authority—Salaries of teachers—Control of managers by education authority—Privity of contract between teacher and education authority—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), s. 7.—A teacher who has been engaged by the managers of a school maintained but not provided by the local education authority cannot sue the local education authority to recover unpaid salary, there being no privity of the contract, although the local education authority may have always paid the salary direct to the teacher up to the period in dispute.—CROCKER v. PLYMOUTH CORPORATION, K.B.D., 391; [1906], 1 K. B. 494; 75 L. J. K. B. 375; 94 L. T. 734.

3. Non-provided school—Denominational religious instruction—Cost of—Liability of local educational authority—Education Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 42), s. 7.—The local education authority are bound by section 7 of the Education Act, 1902, to pay for denominational religious instruction in non-provided schools.—REX v. WEST RIDING COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 674.

4. Public elementary school—Non-provided school—Mistress—Dismissal—Consent of local education authority—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42)—Powers of sub-committees.—The managers of a "non-provided" elementary day school, maintained by the local education authority under the Education Act, 1902, gave a teacher notice of dismissal without first obtaining the consent of the local education authority.

Held, that the notice of dismissal was valid, section 7, clause 1 (c), of the Education Act, 1902, only making the consent of the local education authority to the dismissal of a teacher a condition on observance of which the managers can require the school to be maintained by the local education authority, but not making its consent a condition precedent to a valid dismissal as between the managers and the teacher.—YOUNG v. CUTHBERT, *Ch.D. ELECTION LAW:—

1. Registration—Occupation franchise—Lodger—Dwelling-house—Part of a house—Landlord residing in house—Control—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), ss. 3, 4—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 5.—Where rooms in a house are let out to tenants so as to constitute separate dwelling-houses, the mere fact that the landlord resides in the house does not of itself make the tenants lodgers. It is a question of fact in each case depending upon whether the landlord has any right of control over the rooms let to the tenants. If the landlord has no control over the part of the house which is let to a tenant it is immaterial that he retains control over the passages and staircases and other parts which are used in common by the tenants. Nor is the fact that the landlord pays the rates and taxes and executes the repairs to the house inconsistent with an independent occupation, of the part let, by the tenant as an occupier and not as a lodger.—KENT v. FITTALL, C.A., 225; [1906] 1 K. B. 60; 75 L. J. K. B. 310; 94 L. T. 76

2. Registration—Parliamentary franchise—County vote—Ownership claim—Qualifying property situate in borough—Servant of owner entered on Division II. of occupiers' list for same property—Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 24—Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 Vict. c. 3), s. 3.—Section 24 of the Representation of the People Act, 1832, enacts that no person shall be entitled to a county vote in respect of his estate as a freeholder in any house "occupied" by himself, capable, as regards value, of conferring on him the right to vote in respect thereof for any borough.

Section 3 of the Representation of the People Act, 1884, enacts that "where a man inhabits any dwelling-house by virtue of any service, and the dwelling-house is not inhabited by any person under whom such man serves in such service, he shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act and of the Representation of the People Acts, to be an inhabitant occupier of such dwelling-house as tenant."

The fact that a servant of the freehold owner of a dwelling-house situate within a Parliamentary borough has been rightly entered in Division II. of the occupiers' list for the borough as an inhabitant occupier of the dwelling-house by virtue of his service, under section 3 of the Act of 1884, does not oust the occupancy in respect of the dwelling-house of his employer the freeholder, and thereby enable the employer in respect of his ownership of the freehold to obtain a county vote to which he would not otherwise have been entitled, having regard to section 24 of the Act of 1832.—BROOKS v. BAKER, K.B.D., 195; [1906] 1 K. B. 11; 75 L. J. K. B. 41; 94 L. T. 97.

3. Registration—Parliamentary franchise—Mistake—Incorrect entry of voter's name in list—Omission of second Christian name of voter—Objection taken to entry—Absence of declaration—Power of amendment—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), ss. 24, 28 (1).—A voter's name was entered on the overseers' list as Herbert Green, and was duly objected to. The only ground of objection proved was that the right name of the voter was Herbert Ambrose Green. The voter had neither made a claim, nor a declaration under section 24 of the Registration Act, 1878, to correct the misnomer; but upon the hearing of the objection a party agent, on behalf of the voter, requested the barrister to treat the omission of the second Christian name of the voter as a "mistake" and to correct the entry, under section 28 (1) of the Registration Act, 1878. The barrister held that the omission was not a mistake which he was bound to correct after objection had been taken to the entry, and declined to amend and struck the name off the list.

Held, that the omission in the entry on the list of the second Christian name of the voter was a mistake which the barrister was bound to correct, under section 28 (1) of the Registration Act, 1878, even after objection had been taken to the entry, and even although no declaration to correct the entry had been made under section 24 of the Act of 1878.

4. Registration—Parliamentary franchise in county—£10 occupation qualification—Claim of two joint occupiers—Value of premises only £20—Third person already on overseers' list, unobjected to, for same premises—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102). s. 27—Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 Vict. c. 3), s. 5.—The Representation of the People Act, 1867, s. 27, enacts: "In a county where premises are in the joint occupation of several persons as owners or tenants, and the clear yearly value of such premises is such as would, if divided amongst the several occupiers, so far as the value is concerned, confer on each of them a vote, then each of such joint occupiers shall, if otherwise qualified . . . be entitled to be registered as a voter. . . ."

Section 5 of the Representation of the People Act, 1884, enacts: "Every man occupying any . . . tenement in a county, of a clear yearly value of not less than £10, shall be entitled to be registered as a voter . . . in respect of such occupation, subject to the like conditions as a man is at the passing of this Act, entitled to be registered as a voter . . . in respect of the county occupation franchise."

K. and W. claimed to have their names inserted in Division I. of the occupiers' list in a parliamentary county, in respect of a £10 occupation qualification, the nature of their qualification as described in their claims being "offices (joint)." The qualifying premises consisted of a house, of the clear yearly value of only £20, of which the claimants were lessees, and they used, for the purpose of their business, three rooms and a cellar in said house, and also one bedroom occasionally. The remainder of the said house, consisting of three rooms, was, as the barrister found, "occupied" by G. and his wife, G.'s wife being employed and paid by the claimants as their caretaker. G.'s name had been entered by the overseers in Division II. of the occupiers' list in respect of the said house, and no objection had been taken to that entry. There was no evidence, or finding of fact, that G. occupied by virtue of service merely.

The claims of K. and W. were objected to on the grounds that, as the clear yearly value of the whole house was only £20, and inasmuch as G.'s name was ready entered, without objection, in Division II. of the list of occupation electors, in respect of the same premises, the provisions of section 27 of the Act of 1867 and section 5 of the Act of 1884 rendered the claims inadmissible. The revising barrister having allowed the objection to the claims,

The Court, upon the facts of the case as above stated—and refraining to express any opinion as to what its decision would have been if G.'s occupation of the premises had been found to be an occupation by virtue of service merely—affirmed the decision of the revising barrister.—KIRBY v. BARBER, K.B.D., 119.

FACTORY:—

1. Employing child in meal-times—Dismissal of information—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 141.—A child was employed in a factory where the meal-time was from 5.30 to 6 p.m. Work was stopped for the day at 5.30, and the child was employed after that time in wiping the spindles of a machine in a room where the under-manager and several overlookers were present. Notices were exhibited calling attention to the provisions of the Factory Acts against working in meal-times. The justices dismissed an information against the masters for employing a child in meal-time, on the ground that they had used every possible means to carry out the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901.

Held, that it could not be said that the masters had used due diligence to enforce the Act within section 141.

FISHERY:—

1. Close time—Bye-law—Alteration of close season —Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 39 (1)—Salmon Fishery Law Amendment Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 26), s. 2.—Section 39 (1) of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, enables the conservators of the Severn Fishery Board "to alter the commencement and termination of the annual close season as to the whole or part of the district so that such close season when so altered" should "not be less than 154 days for all modes of salmon fishing except rod and line and" should "not commence later than the 1st day of November in each year."

By bye-law 17 made by the conservators: "The annual close time as to the whole of the Severn Fishery District for all modes of salmon fishing except with rod and line shall commence on the 16th day of August in each year and terminate on the 1st day of February following."

By section 2 of the Salmon Fishery Law Amendment Act, 1879: "Nothwithstanding anything in the Salmon Fishery Acts, 1861 to 1876, contained, the annual close season for putts and putchers shall commence on the 1st of September in each year and terminate on the 1st of May in the ensuing year, both inclusive. None of the provisions of the said Acts as to the weekly close season shall apply to putts and putchers."

3. Licence to fish—River a tributary of salmon river —Water of river diverted into mill-race and mill-dam —Fishing in dam—Whether dam is a "tributary"—Salmon Fishery Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121), ss. 3, 5, 35—Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), ss. 6, 7.—Under the provisions of the Salmon Fishery Acts a fishery district and fishery board were constituted, and the limits of the district were duly declared. From a river which was a tributary of the River Ouse, which contained salmon, water was diverted into a mill-race, and between the river and the mill-race there was formed a three-cornered dam for the purpose of increasing the water power of a mill. The water from the river entered the mill-race under a bridge, and the dam was fed from the race through an opening in the bank about a yard wide, in front of which there was a grating of iron bars about an inch apart, but there was no clough to hold the water in the dam, and the water flowed to and fro between the race and the dam without hindrance, and when the water in the race was lower than the water in the dam the latter returned into the race. All the water which was diverted from the river into the mill-race and dam either passed over the mill wheel and thence into the river, or continued in an extension of the race and passed into the river about half a mile further down. The mill-dam contained trout, and the dam, race, and river were within the geographical limits of the fishery district.

Held, that the mill-dam was a "tributary" of the river, and that a person fishing for trout therein required the licence of the fishery board.—MOSES v. IGGO, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 516; 75 L. J. K. B. 331; 94 L. T. 548.

4. Pollution—Oyster beds on foreshore—Occupation —Discharge of sewage into the sea—Damage to oyster beds through acts of sanitary authority—Right of occupier to sue sanitary authority for damages.—In an action to recover damages from an urban district council for discharging sewage into the sea so as to pollute the plaintiff's oyster storage beds, it appeared that the foreshore on which the beds were situate was part of the waste of the manor, and that the plaintiff and his predecessors had occupied and used the beds for fattening oysters for a period extending as far back as living memory went; that when the plaintiff first acquired the beds, a sewer which had been made by a rural sanitary authority, the predecessors of the defendants, discharged an inconsiderable quantity of sewage into the sea close to the beds; that subsequently the defendants made new sewers and connected them with the old sewer, and thus greatly increased the quantity of sewage discharged from that sewer; and that the plaintiffs beds were thereby contaminated and the oysters therein rendered unsafe for human food.

Held, that the action was maintainable.—FOSTER v. WARBLINGTON URBAN COUNCIL, C.A., 575; [1906] 1 K. B. 648; 75 L. J. K. B. 514; 94 L. T. 876.

GARNISHEE—

1. Attachment of debts—Garnishee order—Discharge of garnishee—Foreign debtor—Foreign garnishee—Possibility of garnishee being sued by debtor in foreign court—Disregard by foreign court of garnishee order—Garnishee not discharged by payment —Ord. 45, r. 1.—In an action against a foreigner residing in Germany the plaintiff recovered judgment and obtained a garnishee order against German bankers who were indebted to the judgment debtor.

Held, that, as the judgment debtor might sue the bankers in Germany for the debt due from them to him and as the German court would not recognize payment under an English garnishee order as a defence to the action on the debt, the garnishee order ought not to have been made.—MARTIN v. NADEL, C.A., 525; [1906] 2 K. Held, that a garnishee order did not give the garnishor any legal or equitable right in the property of a company in priority to a debenture-holder, who had given valuable consideration for the debenture, where the inference to be drawn from the facts was that the claimant had obtained the debenture simply to secure the amount of his loan without any intention to benefit the garnishees or to collude with them in any way, and therefore that the debenture-holder was entitled to succeed in the issue.—GEISSE v. TAYLOR, K.B.D., 215; [1905] 2 K. GAS COMPANY:—

1. Maximum rate of dividend fixed by statute—Income tax paid by company before calculating dividend—Payment of maximum dividend free of income tax.—The special Act of a gas company provided that the profits of the company to be divided among the shareholders should not exceed 10 per cent. on the share capital.

The company paid income tax on its profits before calculating the dividend.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that in calculating the maximum rate of dividend) income tax thereon must be included, and that the company was not entitled to pay dividends at the maximum rate free of income tax.

Income tax on profits is not an expenditure necessary to earn such profits.—ASHTON GAS CO. v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 10; 75 L. J. Ch. 1; 93 L. T. 676.

GIFT:—

Delivery—Organ.—C. having lent an organ to a church, which church was vested in trustees upon trust for public worship under the direction of the vicar of the parish, told the plaintiff that he would give him the organ, and handed him a letter written by the then vicar of the parish showing the organ was only lent and the receipts for the organ. Later, when in the church, he put his hand on the organ and said to H., "I have given" or "I give" this to the plaintiff. The organ remained in the church.

The plaintiff claimed the organ, and the vicar disputed the plaintiff's claim.

In an action to recover the organ, damages for its detention, and a declaration of title against the vicar and churchwardens,

Held, that there was a completed gift by C. to the plaintiff; and Held, further, that the vicar was properly joined as a defendant in the claim for a declaration of title.—RAWLINSON v. MORT, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 555.

HARBOUR:—

1. Defective berth—Damage by grounding—Duty of harbour authority—Condition of harbour and berth—56 Geo. 3, c. 81, s. 27—Duty of wharfinger to discover danger—Duty to warn vessels.—The harbour at S. was vested in trustees who own and have the control and management of the harbour and berths therein, one of which is alongside a wharf known as the K. wharf. The trustees invite vessels to use the harbour and levy tolls on vessels doing so. The K. wharf is owned, controlled, and managed by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co., who collect dues on all goods loaded or discharged at the wharf. Vessels loading or discharging at the wharf have to take the ground at low water at the berth alongside the wharf.

The Trinity House pilots licensed to pilot vessels into and out of the harbour at S. from time to time take soundings in the harbour for the purpose of being able to perform their duty to the ships who employ them, and in pursuance of the directions given them by the pilotage authority. The B., a French steamship, was employed to bring a consignment of flour to R. & A., merchants at S., who owned a warehouse on the K. wharf built on land leased from the railway company. The flour which was carried under bills of lading was to be stored in the warehouse, and the railway company received from R. & A., the consignees of the flour, fees and dues for permission to receive the flour at the wharf. The ship's brokers, who held both the ship's and consignees' bill of lading, expecting the arrival of The B., sent a postcard to the pilots at S. directing them to berth The B. on her arrival at the K. wharf, and this was done. At low water The B. took the ground and was injured by grounding on a heap of rubbish lying in the harbour alongside the wharf. Neither the trustees nor the railway company as wharfingers had ever sounded the berth, each thinking it was the duty of the other to do so, and also because both relied on the soundings made by the pilots, whom they thought would tell them if anything was wrong. The owners of The B. sued the trustees and the wharfingers, the railway company, for the damages sustained by them by reason of the defective condition of the berth, and obtained judgment against both defendants. Both defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Held (confirming the judgment of Bargrave Deane, J.), that the trustees were liable for the damage caused by the defective berth, as they had been guilty of a breach of their statutory duty to remove obstructions for the purpose of preserving the navigation and use of the harbour, and that the railway company, as wharfingers, were liable, for there was at least a duty on them to take reasonable care to find out whether the berth was safe, and that, in the event of the state of the berth being unknown to them, there was a duty on them to warn The B. that they did not know what condition the berth was in.—"BEARN," THE, C.A.; [1906] P. 48; 75 L. J. P. 9; 94 L. T. 265.

2. "Port"—Ships loading and unloading—Statutory tolls and dues—Private docks and quays constructed by and belonging to landowner—Claim for exemption—"Limits of the port"—Enlargement—Fiscal port—Contemporanea expositio—Carnarvon Harbour Act, 1793 (33 Geo. 3, c. cxxiii.)—Carnarvon Harbour Act, 1809 (49 Geo. 3, c. xxiv.)—Evidence—Admissibility.—Near the village of Port Dinorwic, which is situate about four miles north of Carnarvon, the plaintiff constructed docks and quays of his own, at which he was in the habit of loading vessels owned or chartered by him with slates from the Dinorwic quarries, which formed part of his estate, for the purpose of their being conveyed by sea to purchasers. These vessels usually passed out of the Menai Straits by the north end thereof. The vessels on their return brought back to Port Dinorwic other goods for the plaintiff's use, and these goods were unloaded at his docks and quays.

The trustees of Carnarvon Harbour Trust contended that Port Dinorwic was within the limits of the port of Carnarvon, and claimed the right to levy tolls on the plaintiff's vessels under the Carnarvon Harbour Acts of 1793 and 1809.

Held, first, that the word "port" in those Acts meant the fiscal port; and that the performance of duties imposed on the trustees by the Acts conferred benefits which were participated in by the plaintiff and which the duties imposed by the Acts were intended to remunerate.

Held, secondly, that that which the plaintiff had himself actually done amounted by his own act to an enlargement of the limits of the fiscal port of Carnarvon, and extended the same to any dock or quay constructed by him subsequent to the acts on his own land beyond the line of high-water mark.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Diversion of highway—Persons aggrieved—Public interest—Questions left to jury—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 89.—Section 89 of the Highway Act, 1835, provides: "In case of such appeal the justices at the next quarter sessions shall . . . impannel a jury of twelve disinterested men out of the persons returned to serve as jurymen at such quarter sessions, and if after hearing the evidence produced before them the said jury shall return a verdict that the proposed new highway is nearer or more commodious to the public 'or' that the party appealing would not be injured or aggrieved, then the said court of quarter sessions shall dismiss such appeal . . . but if the said jury shall return a verdict that the proposed new highway is not nearer or not more commodius to the public, or that the party appealing would be injured or aggrieved, then the said court of quarter sessions shall allow such appeal, and shall not make such order as aforesaid."

Held, that the word "or" must be read "and," with the result that if the jury return a verdict that the party appealing is aggrieved, the court of quarter sessions must allow the appeal notwithstanding that the jury also return a verdict that the new highway is more commodious.—WALKER v. YORK CORPORATION, K.B.D., 493; [1906] 1 K. 2. Local government—Urban sanitary authority—Subsidence of highway caused by mining operations—Measure of damages. The proprietary right of an urban sanitary authority in a highway which is vested in them under section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is limited to what is necessary to maintain the road as a highway; and accordingly, where the highway has subsided owing to mining operations, the urban sanitary authority are only entiled to recover the cost of making it as commodious as before to the general public, and not the cost of restoring it to its original level.—WEDNESBURY CORPORATION v. LODGE HOLES COLLIERY CO., K.B.D., 412; [1905] 2 K. 3. Locomotive—Nuisance—Breaking water-mains—Excessive weight—Repair—Standard of maintenance—Locomotives Acts, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 13; and 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), s. 12.—The plaintiffs were the highway authority and the owners of the water system within their district.

Held, that the defendant, who was the owner of a heavy traction-engine, was liable to make good damage to a water-main laid under a road and broken by the weight of the engine passing over it, as there was no evidence that the water-main, which had been put down some years before, was not sufficiently strong and well laid to withstand the pressure of the ordinary traffic of the district; or of any negligence on the part of the plaintiffs, in reference to their duty to repair and maintain the road, that contributed to the fracture.—CHICHESTER CORPORATION v. FOSTER, K.B.D., 199; [1906] 1 K. B. 167; 75 L. J. K. B. 33; 93 L. T. 750.

4. Nuisance—Laying rubbish on highway—"Injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling thereon"—Conviction for laying rubble "to the interruption and personal danger" of person travelling on highway—Duplicity—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 72.—By section 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, if any person shall lay any timber, rubbish, or other matter or thing whatsoever upon the highway, "to the injury of such highway, or to the injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling thereon, he shall be liable to be fined."

Held, that this clause creates, not four offences, but two offences only—namely, the doing of any of the specified acts to the injury of the highway, and the doing of them "to the injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling" on the highway, the latter words creating one offence only; and, consequently, a conviction for laying rubble on the highway "to the interruption and personal danger" of any person travelling on the highway is a conviction for one offence only, and is not void for duplicity.

In such case it is sufficient to support the conviction if police constables who know that the obstruction is there see the obstruction while passing along the highway, although there is no evidence that any other person is thereby interrupted or endangered.—SMITH v. PERRY, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. 5. Rights of way—Declaration of road to be a public highway—Consent of "occupier"—Construction—Certiorari—Highways Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 36.—Section 36 of the Highways Act, 1862, enacts: "Where the inhabitants of any parish are desirous of undertaking the repair of any driftway, or private carriage or occupation road, within their parish, in return for the use thereof, the district surveyor may, at the request of the inhabitants of such parish assembled in vestry duly convened for the purpose, and with the consent in writing of the owner and occupier of every part thereof, apply to the justices in petty sessions to declare such driftway or road to be a public highway to be repaired at the expense of the parish . . ."

Held, the owner and occupier of the road, whose consent in writing must be obtained in writing, does not include persons who have mere rights of way or easements over the road.—REX v. SOMERS, K.B.D., 402; [1906] 1 K. B. 326; 75 L. J. K. B. 144; 94 L. T. 194.

The fact that the fences are irregular, and not in a continuous line, does not by itself rebut the presumption of dedication.

HOSPITAL:—

Public health—Infectious hospital—Discharge of patient while still infectious—Liability of local authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 124, 131, 132.—The defendants, a local authority, acting under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, provided for the use of the inhabitants of their district a hospital for the reception of persons suffering from infectious diseases. A visiting physician, who was a competent medical practitioner, was appointed to the hospital, and acted under the general directions of the hospital committee of the defendants, the rules providing (inter alia) that he should be responsible for "the treatment of the patients from the beginning to the end of their stay, and also for their freedom from infection when discharged." A son of the plaintiff was treated in the hospital while suffering from a mild attack of scarlet fever and was ultimately discharged by the visiting physician while still in an infectious condition, and under circumstances which a jury found to amount to a want of reasonable skill and care on his part in and about the discharge; after the boy had returned home, he communicated the disease to three other children of the plaintiff. The plaintiff then sued the defendants to recover the expense to which he had been put in regard to the illness of his other children owing to the premature discharge of his son from the hospital by the visiting physician,

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, for the legal obligation of the defendants extended only to the provision of reasonably skilled and competent medical attendance for the patients, which they had discharged, and that there was no absolute undertaking or obligation on their part that no patient should be discharged by the visiting physician while still in a condition which might cause infection.—EVANS v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. HUSBAND AND WIFE:—

1. Joint account—Overdraft—Security given by wife.—On the 4th of December, 1902, a marriage took place. The husband at that time had an account at a bank in S. This account was on the 17th of December, 1902, transferred to the joint names of himself and his wife, and drawn on by both husband and wife. On the 18th of May, 1903, when the husband was absent, the wife deposited with the bank the deeds of a house belonging to her, and charged them for the debt then or thereafter to become due to the bank from her either solely or jointly with any other person, and agreed to execute a legal mortgage containing a covenant for payment and a power of sale and other proper clauses. The wife died on the 27th of August, 1904, leaving furniture worth £300 to the husband absolutely, and the house she had mortgaged to the bank, worth about £1,400, to her husband for life, with remainder to her next-of-kin. The overdraft on the 18th of May, 1903, was £107, and at the date of her death it was £414. The wife had paid in about £100 into the account.

Held, that the true inference was that the husband and wife agreed to provide jointly for current household expenses, and that each of them ought to pay one moiety of the overdraft.—SHAW, RE, SHAW v. JONES, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 94 L. T. 93.

2. Married woman—Purchase of goods—Liability—"Contract otherwise than as agent"—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.—In order that a contract entered into by a married woman may bind her separate property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, it must affirmatively be shown that she entered into the contract otherwise than as agent.

In 1903 a married woman, while living with her husband, bought from a tradesman certain articles of dress suitable to her position and with the consent of her husband. She had made previous purchases and paid for them with her own cheques, and on the occasion in question was debited with the amount charged as "Mrs. H.," but was without any separate property of her own.

Held (Lords Robertson and Atkinson dissenting), that there was no evidence that she contracted "otherwise than as agent" within the meaning of section 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and therefore that she was not liable.

When, therefore, there is fresh evidence—that is, evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order, or relating to something which has happened since the date of the order, either party is entitled to take out a fresh summons under the section, and have the case determined. There is no time limit fixed, and section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, prescribing six months as the time within which an application must be made, does not apply.—WEIGHTMAN v. WEIGHTMAN, P.D.; 94 L. INJUNCTION:—

1. Equitable execution—Summons for appointment of receiver—Form of summons—Injunction restraining judgment debtor from dealing with property—R. S. C., 1883, Appendix K, Form 61 (a).—Where a judgment creditor applies for leave to issue a summons for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the judgment debtor's property by way of equitable execution, the summons ought not, as a matter of course, to contain an injunction, as in Form 61 (a) of Appendix K to the Rules of the Supreme Court, restraining the judgment debtor from dealing with the property. Such an injunction ought only to be granted where there is evidence of danger that the property may be made away with before the hearing of the summons.—LLOYD'S BANK v. MEDWAY UPPER NAVIGATION CO., C.A., 41; [1905] 2 K. In an action brought by the father against the son for an injunction restraining the son from entering or remaining, &c.

Held, that a case for granting an injunction had not been made out; it was inadvisable to put it in the power of a father to get his son committed to prison for coming to visit him.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Carriage—Licence—Exemption—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 4 (3).—A governess cart that was used for collecting debts and obtaining orders by a travelling upholsterer, and which was used for the conveyance of goods and solely in connection with the business, is not a vehicle "constructed or adapted for use and is used solely for the conveyance of any goods . . . in the course of trade," and so exempt from requiring a carriage licence.—WHITHAM v. MORRIS, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 813.

2. Carriage tax—"Constructed or adapted for use and is used solely for the conveyance of any goods"—Exemptions—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 4, sub-section 3.—The respondent was summoned under section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, for keep ng a carriage without a licence. The vehicle in question was known in the carriage trade as a governess cart, and was used solely by the respondent for the purpose of his business as a general broker and wardrobe dealer, and never for the purposes of pleasure. The justices held that the vehicle came within the exception in the section 4, sub-section 3, as being "a vehicle which is constructed or adapted for use and is solely for the conveyance of any goods or burdens in the course of trade or husbandry" and dismissed the summons.

Held, that the word "solely" in the exception governed the words "constructed or adapted for use" as well as the words "and is used"; and therefore that the vehicle in question did not come within the exception, and that the respondent was liable to the tax.

3. Estate duty—Lunacy—Lunatic entitled to both real and personal estate—Estate duty payable for real estate out of personalty—Charge for next-of-kin—Surplus rents—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, sub-section 1.—A testatrix, by her will, gave all her real and personal estate to D., her sole executor, upon trust, in certain events which had taken place, for her brother, a lunatic. She died in 1896. D., as committee as well as executor, paid all the estate duty, for realty and personalty, out of personalty. The lunatic died in 1903 intestate. The lunatic's next-of-kin claimed that they were entitled to a charge on the real estate for the duty so paid out of the personalty, on the ground that during the lunatic's life the income of the realty being more than enough for his support, the surplus rents had been accumulating and were quite enough to have satisfied the estate duty.

Held, on the assumption that a charge on the real in favour of the personal estate was created by such payment, which point the court refused to decide, the accumulation of rents ought to have borne the charge, which must be considered to have been discharged thereout; and therefore that the claim of the next-of-kin failed. — HOLE, RE, DAVIES v. WITTS, *Ch.D. 4. Estate duty—Property passing on death—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 3; s. 21, sub-section 5—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), ss. 14, 15, sub-section 1.—Certain property described as the husband's fortune, and other property described as the wife's fortune, were settled upon trust (subject to certain life interests) to sell and invest and pay out of the income during the joint lives of husband and wife an annuity of £400 to the wife, and the residue of the income during the life of the wife to the husband; and after the death of the wife, if the husband survived, to pay the whole income to the husband for life; and after the death of the husband to pay the whole income to the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor upon certain trusts for children; and failing children, that the trustees should, after the death of the husband and wife, stand possessed of the husband's fortune in trust for his executors, &c., and should stand possessed of the wife's fortune, if the wife should survive the husband, for her executors, &c. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife survived her husband. The question was whether estate duty was payable on the wife's fortune.

Held, following Attorney-General v. Penrhyn, 83 L. T. 103, that the case was not within the saving clause in section 15, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1896, and, following Attorney-General v. Strange, 46 W. R. 663, [1898] 2 Q. B. 39, not within section 21, sub-section 5, of the Finance Act, 1894, but that, following Attorney-General v. Wood, 45 W. R. 663, [1897] 2 Q. B. 102, the case was within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 3, of the Finance Act, 1894, and that so much therefore of the wife's fortune as formed part of the capital which produced the income of £400 a year must not be deemed to have passed on the husband's death. Estate duty was therefore payable on the wife's fortune, except as to so much as her share of the capitalized value of the fund which produced the income of £400 a year.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GLOSSOP, K.B.D., 376; [1906] 1 K. 5. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Incidence of duties and interest—General residue insufficient—Annuities payable out of particular fund—Liability of legatee of particular residue—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 6, sub-section 2; s. 9, sub-section 1; s. 14, sub-section 1—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19, sub-section 1.—A testator, who died in the year 1895, bequeathed "all my moneys invested in and upon any stocks or funds, whether in or out of the United Kingdom, and all my railway stocks, shares, debentures, and bonds, and generally all and every my securities for money" to trustees upon trust during the life of his sister to pay out of the income three annuities of £1,000, £500, and £500 respectively, and the residue thereof to his brother W. during his life.

After the death of the testator's sister the trustees were to hold the trust fund, as to two sums of £21,000 and £18,000, upon certain trusts in favour of two of the testator's brothers and their issue; and to stand possessed of the residue upon trust for W. for life, with remainders over. The testator bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate of whatever kind to W., subject to the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and certain annuities.

The residuary personalty was insufficient to pay the testator's debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, so a part of the estate duty had to be paid out of the trust fund.

Held, that the interest given to W. in each case was not a share of the fund, but an interest in the actual residue after payment respectively of the annuities and the two sums of £21,000 and £18,000; and therefore the annuities and those two sums were not liable to diminution by reason of the estate duty having to be borne by the fund or on account of the settlement estate duty being payable in respect of the fund.

6. Excise—Retail sale of beer—Licence for one shop—"Soliciting, taking, or receiving orders" at unlicensed premises—Person who has licence for one shop soliciting orders at unlicensed shop—Liability for act of servant—Revenue Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 90), s. 17.—Section 17 of the Revenue Act, 1867, provides that: "If any person shall solicit, take, or receive any order for spirits, wine, or other article, for the dealing in, retailing, or selling whereof an excise licence is by law required, without having in force a proper excise licence authorizing him so to do," he shall be liable to a penalty.

Held, that this section requires a proper excise licence to be taken out with respect to the shop or premises at which the soliciting or accepting of orders takes place, although the person who so solicits or accepts the order is himself duly licensed to deal in or sell the particular article at other premises; and, consequently, a person commits a breach of this section who, although he has in force in respect of one shop a proper excise licence for the retail sale of beer for consumption off the premises, solicits or accepts, either by himself or by his assistant or servant, at another shop, in respect of which he has no such licence, orders for beer for the selling whereof an excise licence is required, which orders are to be forwarded to and to be executed from the licensed premises, and in such case the licensed person for whom the order is accepted is equally liable whether the order is accepted by himself or by his assistant in the shop.—ELIAS v. DUNLOP, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. 7. Imported watches—Customs Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 47), s. 59—12 Geo. 2, c. 26.—Imported gold and silver watches are not "plate" within the meaning of section 59 of the Customs Act, 1842, and a seller of such watches which have not been assayed, stamped, and marked as required by the Customs Act, 1842, is not, therefore, liable to the penalties imposed by 12 Geo. 2, c. 26.—GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY v. WYATT, K.B.D., 144; [1905] 2 K. The net rent accruing to the plaintiff after payment of rent to the superior landlord was £1,625 per annum. The plaintiff agreed to sell the defendants his reversion in consideration of a cash payment of £1,000 and the execution of a deed whereby the defendants covenanted to pay to the plaintiff £1,625 per annum to the end of the term. The defendants claimed to deduct income tax from the annual sum of £1,625 under section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853.

Held, that the object of the transaction being to secure to the plaintiff to the end of the term the same net amount that he had previously received as rent, the payments were annual payments within section 40 of the Income Tax, 1853, and that therefore the deduction had been properly made.—CHADWICK v. PEARL LIFE ASSURANCE CO., K.B.D., 78; [1905] 2 K. 9. Income tax—Annuity payable under contract—Annual sum consisting partly of capital and partly of interest—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 102—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedules C and D.—By virtue of contracts made in 1849 and 1854 between the East India Company and a railway company the Secretary of State for India had the option of purchasing the railway by payment of an annuity. Before the time limited for exercising the option arrived, the Secretary of State concluded a bargain with the railway company, which was sanctioned by an Act of Parliament of 1879, as to the terms on which the purchase of the railway by payment of an annuity should be carried out. The terms contained a statement that the amount of the annuity of £5 12s. 6d. into which every £100 stock of the company was intended to be commuted at the price of £125 was calculated on the basis of £5 7s. 6d., part thereof being interest at the rate of £4 6s. per cent. per annum on the said amount of £125, and of a sum of 5s. other part thereof being the amount required to be set aside for the purpose of a sinking fund.

Held, that, notwithstanding the fact that the bargain was concluded before the time limited for exercising the option arrived, and notwithstanding the statement as to the manner in which the annuity was calculated, the principle of Secretary of State for India v. Scoble, 51 W. R. 675, [1903] A. C. 299, applied, and income tax was payable only on so much of the annuity as in accordance with that case really represented interest.—EAST INDIAN RAILWAY v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, C.A., 4; [1905] 2 K. 10. Income tax—Depreciation by reason of wear and tear—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 35), s. 12.—The appellants, a firm of shipowners, were the owners of a fleet of vessels, whose average age during the years of assessment was thirty-one years, also of a wooden hulk forty years old used by them in a coal-bunkering business. Prior to the first year of assessment the appellants had been allowed from their gross profits deductions by reason of wear and tear of sums amounting in all to 96 per cent. of the prime value, including sums expended on them by way of additions and repairs, other than ordinary repairs. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue found as a fact that the breaking-up value of the ship was considerably more than 4 per cent. of the prime cost, together with the repairs and additions referred to, and refused to allow any further sum for depreciation in respect of the ships under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, or in respect of the hulk, on the ground that it was not "plant" within the meaning of the section.

Held, that the commissioners were not entitled to take the depreciation allowed in previous years, and that they were bound under section 12 to make a just and reasonable allowance in respect of the diminution in value by reason of wear and tear during the years of assessment.

Held, also, that the hulk was plant within the section 12.—HALL v. RICKMAN. K.B.D., 380; [1906] 1 K. B. 311; 75 L. J. K. B. 178; 94 L. T. 224.

The amount and value of the soil utilized could be ascertained.

Held, that in estimating the yearly profits of the company under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts, no deduction could be allowed in respect of such exhaustion of capital.

That fund was vested in trustees, and managed by a committee.

The income of the fund was to be applied by the committee towards the augmentation of the stipends of ministers of such congregations as they might from time to time in this discretion select.

Each grant was to be made for the current year only, and, in making such grant, regard was to be paid to the state and condition of the congregation, and their ability to make adequate provision for their minister. The private income, the stipend received from the congregation, the age, training, and length of service of each applicant for a grant was also taken into consideration. Each grant was paid half-yearly, and ceased on the death, resignation, or removal of the recipient, and any part of the grant then unpaid was not paid at all either to him or his successor.

Held (reversing the judgment of Phillimore, J.), that the amount of the grant was part of the profits or gains of the minister in his profession or vocation, and that he was chargeable with income tax in respect thereof.—POYNTING v. FAULKNER, C.A.; 93 L. T. 367.

15. Income tax—Profits or gains arising from trade—"Person residing in the United Kingdom"—"Trade exercised within the United Kingdom"—Company owning mines abroad—Registration abroad—Head office abroad—Business mainly conducted in London—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—A company possessed of diamond mines in Cape Colony, and carrying on the business of diamond merchants, was registered as a ilmited company in Cape Colony, and had its head office at Kimberley, where the general meetings of the shareholders were held. It had also an office in London, and the majority of the directors resided in England.

Held, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, which showed that the real business of the company was conducted in London, first, that the company was resident within the United Kingdom; and, secondly, that it exercised trade within the United Kingdom, so as on both grounds to be chargeable with income tax on the profits of its trade under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act. 1853.—DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES v HOWE, C.A., 9; [1905] 2 K B. 612; 74 L. The sewerage board appealed on the ground that they had no land in the parish and that their interests in the realty were easements only acquired for the purpose of the sewer or sewage carrier.

Held, that the appellants were liable to the assessment.

Both buildings were within the same curtilage, and there was only one entrance from the street, which was common to the office and dwelling-house. The building of the office was not physically joined to the house, nor was there any covered passage between the two, though they were within the same curtilage; persons passing from one to the other had not to go outside the curtilage.

Held, that this office was not so separate and so distinct as to be a tenement within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 13 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, and that it was therefore not entitled to the exemption given by that sub-section.—NICHOLLS v. MALINS, K.B.D., 404; [1906] 1 K. (Limited) (called therein the "old company"), whose registered address was in London, with a branch in Paris, of the one part, and M. & Co. (Paris) (Limited) (called the "new company"), whose registered address was also in London, of the other part, the property therein enumerated was conveyed by the old company to the new company—namely, the above-mentioned branch business in Paris, the goodwill, fixtures, fittings, stock, French trade-marks, leases of the above premises, and benefit of contracts, and included certain other land and buildings therein described—and in consideration of the above the new company allotted to the the old company 72,000 shares in its share capital of a nominal value of £1 each, 40,446 being in respect of the movable property, and 31,554 in respect of the immovable property. The instrument stated that the shares were not yet issued (created), but that they would be, and would then be issued and delivered in England to the old company.

All the property comprised in the deed was situate in France, it was executed by both parties in France, and as between the parties by the law of France the property passed as from the date thereof.

Four-and-a-half per cent. gold coupon Treasury note. No. 7781. 1,000 dollars. United States of Mexico acknowledge themselves indebted and promise to pay to bearer on the 1st of June, 1905, one thousand dollars (1,000 dollars) in gold coin of the United States of America, and also to pay interest on said principal sum in like gold coin at the rate of four-and-a-half per cent. per annum from the 1st of June, 1903, semi-annually on the first days of December and June in each year upon surrender of the annexed coupons as they respectively mature. Both as to principal and interest, this Treasury note shall be for ever exempt from any taxes or assessments which may at present exist or be hereafter imposed by the United States of Mexico. The principal and interest of this Treasury note are payable in the City of New York at the office of Speyer & Co., or at the option of the holder in London, England, at the office of Speyer Brothers, in sterling at the fixed rate of 4.85 dollars to the pound sterling. This note is redeemable at par and accrued interest at the option of the United States of Mexico at any time before maturity on sixty days' notice, to be given by publication in two newspapers of general circulation in said city of New York and in two newspapers of general circulation in said city of London; notice having been so given, interest on this Treasury note shall cease on the day so designated for redemption."

It was found as a fact that it was capable of being sold on the Stock Exchange.

The purchaser devised the parcel of land to his wife, who devised it to their daughter, who paid succession duty in respect thereof on her mother's death. Subsequently the tenant for life died.

Held, that succession duty was payable by the daughter on the death of the tenant for life also, the duty to be calculated with reference to the life of the daughter.

An heir of entail has a limited interest in the estate within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894.

Therefore, where an heir of entail exercised his option of paying off the succession duty to which he was liable by instalments, but took no steps to make the sum so paid a charge on the estate,

Held, that he had, by virtue of section 9, sub-section 6. of the Finance Act, 1894, a transmissible title at his death to an amount to be raised out of the estate equal to the instalments so paid, upon which the Crown was entitled to claim succession duty.

2. Fire—Subrogation of rights—Indemnity—Compulsory purchase of insured premises—Notice to treat—Fire after notice—Payment by insurers—Acceptance by vendor (assured) of a sum less by the amount paid for the loss.—During the currency of a policy against fire a corporation served on the assured a notice to treat for the purchase of the insured buildings, under the powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Subsequent to the notice, but before anything further had been done under the notice, the premises were destroyed by fire. The insurers paid the agreed amount of the loss to the vendor. The corporation and the vendor agreed the amount of the purchase price, and in so doing took into account the amount which the insurers had paid the vendor, reducing the purchase price by that amount. The insurers sued the vendor to recover the amount which they had paid, alleging that the vendor might have received that amount from the corporation.

Held, that the corporation were not entitled to the benefit of the policy issued to the vendor. The contract was a personal one, and did not pass to the corporation. The contract being one of mere indemnity, the insurers, upon payment of the loss, became entitled to all the rights then vested in the vendor in respect of the destroyed property. Those rights included a right to be paid by the corporation the value of the property as at the date of the notice to treat. It was not legally possible for the vendor to deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of this right by any agreement with the corporation, and the insurers were entitled to recover the amount.—PHŒNIX ASSURANCE CO. v. SPOONER, K.B.D., 313; [1905] 2 K. 3. Marine—Charterers—Right of charterers to sue on policy—Intention—Construction of charter-party.—Although the words of a policy are wide enough to include third persons, only those will be included on whose behalf the policy is in fact effected. And where the evidence of such inclusion is to be inferred from the terms used in the charter-party "that the owners shall pay for the insurance of the vessel," this will not be sufficient to enable the charterers to avail themselves of the wide terms of the insurance policy.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (53 W. R. 420, [1905] 1 K. B. 637) affirmed.—BOSTON FRUIT CO. v. BRITISH AND FOREIGN INSURANCE CO., H.L., 557; [1906] A. C. 336; 75 L. J. K. B. 537; 94 L. T. 806.

4. Marine—Insurable interest—Constructive total loss — Policy on disbursements — Advances for "necessaries"—Admiralty Court Act. 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 65), s. 6.—The plaintiffs, who had made advances for "necessaries" within the meaning of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, caused themselves to be insured "at and from Vancouver. . . . and/or places in the United Kingdom, and for thirty days in port after arrival . . . upon any kind of goods . . . and upon the body . . . of and in . . . The Prince Louis . . . on disbursements against the risk of total and constructive total loss of ship only." The perils insured against included perils of the seas. During the insured voyage the vessel received such damage from perils of the seas as to amount to a constructive total loss, the cost of repairing her exceeding the value of the ship when repaired. The plaintiffs collected the freight, having a lien on it for advances, and placed it to the credit of their account with the shipowners. The freight thus retained was insufficient to repay the plaintiffs the whole amount of their advances. The plaintiffs had no lien or charge upon the ship.

Held, that, so far as the plaintiff's claim for disbursements was a claim for necessaries within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, the plaintiffs had an insurable interest to the extent of the unsatisfied balance of the advances. A creditor of a shipowner who has advanced money for the necessary disbursements of the ship has an insurable interest in the debt due to him by the shipowner for such necessaries. Such a debt carries with it the legal right to seize the ship in an action in rem. The debt is different from ordinary debts, as the law gives to a creditor for necessaries a kind of security which ordinary creditors do not possess. When the ship is at sea the creditor for necessaries has a real interest in its safety.—MORAN, GALLOWAY, & CO. v. UZIELLI, K.B.D., 250; [1905] 2 K. B. 555; 74 L. J. K. B. 494.

5. Marine—Reinsurance—"£1,000 excess of £500"—Loss of barge-load—£298 paid by insurers—F.P.A. clause—"Each craft to be deemed a separate insurance."—A policy of reinsurance was effected by the plaintiffs (insurers) with the defendants for "£1,000 excess of £500." The policy contained these clauses: "including all risk of craft and/or raft and/or of any special lighterage, each craft, raft, or lighter to be deemed a separate insurance"; "warranted free from particular average unless the ship or craft or cargo be stranded, sunk . . ." The plaintiffs paid the assured £298, their proportion, in respect of the loss of a barge-load of wheat, which was being carried to the vessel, the barge sinking; the total amount of the plaintiffs' risk in that craft-load was £400. The defendants refused to pay their proportion of the reinsured amount of £1 000 excess of £500.

Held, "£1,000 excess of £500" meant that if the plaintiffs were interested to an amount over £500, then for that excess up to £1,000 the defendants relieve the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had rightfully paid £298 to the assured, and the defendants were liable to pay their proportion—viz., £70 4s. 4d.—to the plaintiffs. The clause "each craft to be deemed a separate insurance" was put in solely with reference to a particular average claim, and meant that if a craft was lost with part of the whole insured interest, it was to be treated as if it were a separate insurance.—SOUTH BRITISH FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE CO. OF NEW ZEALAND v. DA COSTA, K.B.D., 420; [1906] 1 K. B. 456; 75 L. J. K. B. 276; 94 L. T. 435.

INTERPLEADER:—

Goods seized by sheriff under fi. fa.—Claim by third person—Part of goods sold under interpleader order—Money paid into court—Form of issue between claimant and execution creditor.—The sheriff seized all the goods in a house under writs of fi. fa. at the suit of T. and other creditors.

The claimant claimed all the goods, and, the other creditors having abandoned their executions, an order was made upon an interpleader summons that the sheriff should sell a sufficient quantity of the goods to satisfy T.'s execution, and should pay the proceeds into court to abide the event of an issue between the claimant and T.

The sheriff sold goods sufficient to satisfy T.'s execution, and paid the proceeds into court. There then remained a large quantity of goods unsold.

Held (allowing the appeal), that the proper form of issue was whether the goods seized and sold by the sheriff, or some part thereof, were the property of the claimant as against T.—TEBB v. POWELL, C.A.; 93 L. T. 468.

JERSEY, LAW of:—

Will—Setting aside—Undue influence—Law of Jersey—Admissibility of evidence—Joinder of parties.—In order to set aside a will on the ground of "undue influence" the exercise of coercion in the particular case must be proved, by means of which the mind of the testator has been coerced into doing that which he did not desire to do.

Observations of Sir J. Hannen in Wingrove v. Wingrove, 11 P. Div. 81, approved. Judgment of the court below reversed.

By the law of Jersey interested parties and their near relations are not accepted as witnesses in an action. In a case in which it was sought to set aside a will by which a considerable sum had been left to local charities,

Held, that the evidence of the executors was properly excluded; but that various parochial authorities whose co-operation would be useful, if not necessary, if the will were held valid and the trust created by it established, should not have been made parties to the action, and that their evidence, and that of their relatives, was admissible.—BAUDAINS v. RICHARDSON, P.C.; [1906] A. JUSTICES:—

1. Appeal—Case stated by justices—Notice of appeal—Case delivered to respondent, but no notice of appeal given—Indorsement on case of acceptance of service—Condition precedent—Jurisdiction to hear appeal—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43), s. 2.—By section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, either party, if dissatisfied with the determination of the justices, may apply for a case, and such party shall within three days after receiving the case transmit the same to the court, "first giving notice in writing of such appeal, with a copy of the case so stated and signed, to the other party."

An appellant duly delivered a copy of the case to the respondents' solicitors, but he did not with such copy give notice in writing of such appeal, and the respondents' solicitors indorsed upon the case that they accepted service thereof on behalf of the respondents.

Held, that the giving of the notice of appeal was a condition precedent to the right of the appellant to have his appeal heard, and that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, notwithstanding that the case had been duly delivered to the respondents' solicitors, and that a statement had been indorsed thereon by the respondents' solicitors that they accepted service of the case on behalf of the respondents.—RUST v. ST. BOTOLPH, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 575.

2. Disqualification—Justices incompetent to act sitting on bench—Refusal of renewal by licensing justices—Appeal—Licensing justices sitting on bench at quarter sessions on hearing of appeal—Validity of order.—Upon an appeal to quarter sessions from an order of licensing justices refusing to renew a licence, two of the licensing justices who were present at the licensing meeting, and who were parties to the making of the order appealed against, sat on the bench with the chairman and justices of quarter sessions during the hearing of the appeal; they retired with the other justices, and returned into court and sat on the bench when the decision was given and an order made dismissing the appeal, but they took no part whatever in court, or when the justices retired, in the discussion of the case or in the decision of the appeal.

Held, that, as the two justices were disqualified from acting on the appeal from their own order, they ought not to have sat on the bench while the appeal was being heard, and their presence on the bench, even though they took no part in the proceedings, rendered the order made by quarter sessions invalid, and the appeal ought to be reheard.—REX v. LANCASHIRE JUSTICES, K.B.D.; 75 L. LAND TRANSFER:—

Mortgage or charge—Registration—Registered proprietor—Fraud—Forged transfer—Rectification of register—Indemnity—Insurance fund—Request to register—Implied warranty of title—Loss by rectification—Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87)—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 7.—A transferee of a charge on registered land in Middlesex took his transfer to the Land Registry for registration, and was accordingly registered as proprietor of the charge. It was afterwards discovered that the transfer was forged by the solicitor of the original proprietor. The original proprietor obtained an order for rectification of the register. The transferee applied to the registrar for indemnity under section 7 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and the registrar made an award in his favour, which was confirmed by Kekewich, J.

Held, on appeal, that as the transferee had no transfer from some person previously on the register, and had not, therefore, in that sense relied on the register, he had suffered no loss by rectification, and was not entitled to any indemnity under section 7.

Per Stirling, L.J.—The registrar under the Land Transfer Acts has a statutory duty of a ministerial character to register transfers of registered charges on registered land, and on the demand of the transferee to issue to him a certificate of proprietorship. It is a breach of duty and a wrong to the existing registered proprietor to remove his name and register the charge in the name of the supposed transferee if the latter has, in fact, no title to require the registrar to do so. And an act of the registrar when called upon to exercise his duty on the request, direction, and demand of another, which is apparently legal, but is, in fact, illegal and a breach of duty, is contemplated by the Act of 1897 as giving rise to rights of indemnity against the Crown. On the principles laid down in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, 54 W. R. 49, there ought to be implied a contract by any person applying for registration to keep the Crown indemnified against any liability which may result from the exercise by the registrar of the supposed duty to register the instrument presented to him. Also a person who brings a transfer to a registering authority and requests him to register it, not only affirms it to be genuine but warrants it to be so.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Agreement of tenancy—Construction of.—A tenant entered into possession of premises under an agreement of tenancy "for a period of twelve months with the option of a lease after the aforesaid time at the rental of £30 per annum."

Held, that under the agreement the tenant had a right to claim a lease for a further period of at least one year after the expiration of the first twelve months.—AUSTIN v. NEWHAM, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 167; 75 L. J. K. B. 563.

2. Covenant—Lease of public-house—Covenant to keep and conduct the house in a regular and proper manner—Knowingly do or suffer any act whereby renewal of licence refused—Act of sub-lessee.—By a lease of a beerhouse the lessee covenanted that he would at all times during his term keep and conduct the house in a regular and proper manner in every respect, and would not knowingly or willingly do or suffer any act whereby the licence might become indorsed, forfeited, or the renewal thereof refused, and would not commit any offence against the licensing laws for the time being in force. The lessee sublet the house, and the sub-lessee was convicted of permitting drunkenness on the premises, and the renewal of the licence was in consequence refused. In an action by the lessor against the lessee to recover damages for breach of covenant, Held, that the first part of the covenant was an absolute covenant to keep and conduct the house in a regular and proper manner, and was not qualified by the subsequent part, and that there had been a breach of it entitling the lessor to damages.

3. Covenant not to assign without lessor's consent—Condition to lessor's consent—Covenant by assignee to pay rent during residue of term—Validity of covenant—Action by lessor against assignee—"Fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine payable for or in respect of such consent"—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 3.—A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign the demised premises without the consent of the lessors, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld. The lessee, being desirous to assign, applied to the lessors for the necessary consent. The lessors required as a condition to their consent that the assignee should covenant that he would pay the rent reserved during the remainder of the lease. A licence to assign was accordingly granted by the lessors in the form of an indenture, to which the assignee was a party, and which contained a covenant by the assignee that he would pay the rent reserved by the lease during the residue of the term. In an action by the lessors against the assignee under the covenant to recover rent which accrued due after a subsequent assignment,

Held, that section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, afforded no defence to the action; for, even if the covenant was for the payment of a "fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine," the effect of the section was not to make such a payment illegal, but merely to read into the lease as between the parties to the lease a proviso that no such sum should be payable, and the assignee was not in a position to complain of a breach of that proviso.

Semble, per Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ., that the covenant was not a covenant for the payment of a "fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine" within the meaning of section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892.—WAITE v. JENNINGS, C.A., 511; [1906] 2 K. B. 11; 75 L. J. K. B. 542.

4. Covenant to repair—Lessor's liability—Old building—Natural decay—Construction.—The principle of construction that, under a covenant to repair, the covenantor need not renew a building worn out by age or decaying from faulty construction applies to the case of a lessor as well as to the case of a lessee who has entered into such a covenant; and for the purpose of construing such a covenant there is in this respect no distinction between the two cases.—TORRENS v. WALKER, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 584; [1906] 2 Ch. 166; 75 L. J. Ch. 645.

5. Lease—Long term—Option to purchase fee—Rule against perpetuities—Covenant running with land—32 Hen. 8, c. 34.—An option in a lease to purchase the fee simple is something wholly outside the relations of landlord and tenant, with which alone the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, deals, and therefore cannot be enforced as running with the land within the purview of that statute, though such a contract in a lease may be good as binding the heirs and assigns, provided it does not infringe the law against perpetuities.

Decision of Warrington, J. (53 W. R. 203), affirmed.—WOODALL v. CLIFTON, C.A., 7; [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L. J. Ch. 555; 93 L. T. 257.

6. Lease—Specific performance—Reservation of minerals—Covenant to erect houses—Particulars of houses specified—Lessee owner of minerals—Compromise of action brought by mortgagor—Damages.—The defendant had, in 1894, taken a lease of a certain piece of land for ninety-nine years, by which he covenanted to erect seven dwelling-houses similar to those already erected in a certain road, and to deliver them up at the end of the term in good and substantial repair. The lease also contained a reservation of the mines and minerals (which did not belong to the lessor) in favour of the person who would, if the lease had not been made, be for the time being entitled thereto, with power to enter upon the demised premises and occupy the surface thereof and to work the minerals under the lands, without leaving any support for the surface or any buildings thereon, and for that purpose to sink pits and to make pit-hills and spoil-banks, paying reasonable compensation to the lessee and his assigns for the damage so caused. The lands the subject of the lease had been assigned by the lessor, and the assignee mortgaged them to the plaintiff. The defendant was also by another lease granted by the owner of the minerals, and prior in date to the present one, entitled to the mines and minerals under the demised land. As the defendant had not complied with his covenant to erect the seven houses, although he had erected other buildings, the mortgagor had brought an action for possession on the ground of the breach, but that action had been compromised. The plaintiff, who was the mortgagee of the demised land, now sued for specific performance of the covenant to build the seven houses.

Held, that the defendant was bound to comply with his covenant to build, notwithstanding that he was entitled under his mining lease to use the whole surface of the land for mining operations; that the particulars of the houses to be erected under the covenant were sufficiently specified so that specific performance could be decreed; that a a decree for specific performance was the only remedy available, as the damages for the injury done to the reversion would necessarily be infinitesimal on account of the length of the lease, and would therefore be no adequate compensation for the depreciation of the reversion: and also that the compromise of the action brought by the mortgagor for possession on the ground of noncompliance with the covenant to build was no defence to the present action, as the mortgagor's action was not maintainable, and therefore its compromise could not affect the mortgagee.—MOLYNEUX v. RICHARD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 177; [1906] 1 Ch. 34; 75 L. J. Ch. 39; 93 L. T. 698.

7. Lessor tenant for life—Covenant by lessor and assigns—Death of lessor—Liability of executors.—The plaintiffs were the executors of one Bath and the defendants the executors of one Bowles, and the action was brought for the balance of compensation for certain crops, &c., pursuant to a covenant in a lease granted by Bowles to Bath.

Bowles was tenant for life, and under the powers of the Settled Land Acts granted the lease, and by its terms it was provided: "And the lessor hereby for himself and his assigns covenants with the lessee that he will pay the tithe rent-charge on the said premises, also that he, the lessor, or his assigns, or the succeeding tenants will at the expiration or sooner determination of the said term take and pay for the growing crops and manure then upon the said demised premises and the unexhausted tillages and dressings according to the custom of the country at a fair valuation to be made by two valuers, one to be chosen by each party, or, in the event of their differing, then by a third person to be chosen by such valuers."

After certain other provisions the lease provided that in the event of the lessor or his assigns desiring during the said term to resume possession the lessor or his assigns should pay to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the growing crops, &c., "and for the unexhausted tillages and dressings the like amount as he or they would be entitled to upon quitting, pursuant to the covenant of the lessor in that behalf before contained."

The lessor having died, the owners of the fee simple sold a certain portion of the demised property to the C. F. E. (Limited), subject to the tenancy and to the payment of compensation, &c., under the lease. The plaintiffs paid rent in respect of this portion to the C. F. E. (Limited), and, notice having been given by the C. F. E. (Limited) to the plaintiffs that they intended to resume possession, it was agreed that the C. F. E. (Limited) should pay the plaintiffs £50 in respect of the unexhausted improvements.

The C. F. E. (Limited) being wound up, the plaintiffs could not obtain this amount, and they then sued the defendants on the covenant by Bowles in the lease.

Held (affirming the decision of the learned county court judge), that the defendants were not liable.—BATH v. BOWLES, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 801.

8. Notice to landlord of defective state of repair—Contract by landlord to repair—Injury to wife of tenant—Remedy of tenant—Remedy of wife.—A. lets a house to B. C., the wife of B., as agent of B., subsequently agrees with A. that B. would continue in occupation of the said premises on the condition that A. does the repairs, which are badly needed. A. does not repair, and C. is seriously injured owing to the defective condition of the kitchen floor.

Held (Mathew, L.J., dissenting), that C. had no cause of action; not on the contract because she was no party to it; not in tort because it could not be shown that A. owed any duty to her so as to make him liable for misfeasance.

Per Mathew, L.J.—C. had a cause of action, on the ground that A. induced her to continue on the premises by a representation which proved to be untrue.—CAVALIER v. POPE, C.A., 68; [1905] 2 K. B. 757; 74 L. J. K. B. 857; 93 L. T. 475.

9. "Outgoings"—Covenant by tenant to pay "outgoings"—Paving expenses—Liability of tenant.—Action to recover £22 13s. 3d. paid by the plaintiff to the Sheffield Corporation as to the proportion of expenses incurred under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in levelling, paving, and making good a road abutting on premises of which the plaintiff was lessor and the defendants were lessees; the plaintiff contended that the defendants were liable under a covenant contained in the lease of the premises to repay the amount. The lease was for twenty-one years, at an annual rent of £105 16s. clear of all deductions (except property tax), and contained covenants by the lessees to pay the rent reserved and "all rates, taxes, and outgoings now payable or hereafter to become payable in respect of the said premises." There was also a repairing covenant in the lease. The county court judge held, upon the authority of Hill v. Edwards, (1885) Cab. & Ell. 481, and Tidswell v. Whitworth, (1867) L. R. 2 C. P. 326, that the plaintiff could recover, and gave judgment for the defendants.

The Court allowed the appeal, holding that paving expenses were "outgoings" within the covenant, and that no distinction could for this purpose be drawn between such expenses and expenses incurred for work, such as sanitary work, done on the demised premises.—GREAVES v. WHITMARSH, WATSON, & Co., K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 340; 75 L. J. K. B. 633.

10. Sale of the reversion—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Liability of lessor.—A lease contained the following covenant for quiet enjoyment: "And the lessor for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns doth hereby covenant with the lessee that the lessee . . . shall and may peaceably enjoy the demised premises during the said term without any interruption or disturbance by the lessor or any person claiming under him." A breach of this covenant was committed by the assignee of the reversioner.

Held, that the lessor was not liable for wrongful or negligent acts committed by an assignee of the reversioner whom he has not expressly or impliedly authorized to do the acts.—WILLIAMS v. GABRIEL, K.B.D., 379; [1906] 1 K. B. 155; 75 L. J. K. B. 149; 94 L. T. 17.

11. Yearly tenancy—Construction of agreement.—By an agreement of tenancy certain licensed premises were let from a certain date "until such tenancy should be determined as hereinafter mentioned," at an annual rent of £70 clear of all deductions except landlord's property tax, payable quarterly. The tenant agreed further to keep the premises in repair, not to assign or underlet without notice, to keep up the licences wherever necessary, and the landlord had the right to eject the tenant for misconduct. The tenancy was terminable by three months' notice in writing.

Held, that, having regard to the above terms, the agreement was one for a yearly tenancy, terminable only by a three months' notice expiring at the end of any full year.—LEWIS v. BAKER, K.B.D., 146; [1905] 2 K. B. 576; 74 L. J. K. B. 617; 93 L. T. 267.

2. Costs—Apportionment—Funds in court—Reinvestment in land—Part only of invested money provided from funds in court—Costs of application and expenses.—Upon an application for reinvestment in land of a fund paid into court by the London County Council as the price of land bought by the council under compulsory powers of purchase, the fund in court formed less than half the sum proposed to be reinvested.

Held, that the usual order must be made as to costs, following the form appearing on p. 2457 of Seton's Forms of Judgments and Orders, no special provision being made for the apportionment of the surveyor's and conveyancing fees.—J. Before the end of January, 1902, they had forwarded claims and particulars subject to an apportioned rent of £200 per annum. The parties negotiated at considerable expense with regard to the amount of the apportioned rent, and ultimately, after a summons issued under section 119 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on the 18th March, 1904, the claimants agreed to an apportionment at £100 per annum. An offer of considerably less than the amount claimed having been made to the lessees at this apportioned rent, they required the whole manufactory to be taken under section 92. In their action the plaintiffs moved for an interim injunction to restrain further proceedings under the notices to treat.

Held, that the mere lapse of time standing alone counted for nothing, as the compensation asked had never been agreed to provided the reduction in the apportioned rent was consented to, and that the claimants had not forfeited their right to insist on the whole manufactory being taken by simply making their claim.

LEASE:—

1. Forfeiture on liquidation—Relief against—Sale within a year of forfeiture—What amounts to, within meaning of section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892.—The M. B. Co., defendants, were mortgagees in possession of the freehold of certain premises leased to the H. C. Co. This company went into liquidation, and thereby incurred a forfeiture for breach of a covenant in their leases against bankruptcy. The receiver appointed by the H. C. Co., to enable him to take advantage of the provision for relief against such a forfeiture under section 14, sub-sections 1 and 6, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, entered into a contract for sale within one year from the date of the company going into liquidation, but such contract was conditional only and entered into solely for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions in the Acts.

Section 14, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, provided for relief against forfeiture. Sub-section 6 of this section excludes from such relief breaches of conditions for forfeiture on the bankruptcy of a lessee.

Section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, extended these provisions for relief given by section 14 to a case of forfeiture on bankruptcy, but for one year only from the date of the bankruptcy; but, in case of a sale within one year, the provisions for relief were made applicable.

On a motion in the action by the M. B. Co. for possession of the premises for the forfeiture, Held, there was no sale within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892. To come within the provisions of that section and sub-section a sale must be completed by conveyance, or the contract entered into must be an absolute contract for sale.—CASTLE & SONS, RE, MITCHELL v. CASTLE & SONS, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 94 L. T. 396.

2. Grant of land for specific purpose—Light—External or party-wall—Trespass—Derogation from grant—Authority of architect—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 5, sub-section 16.—The defendants, who owned some land, which was covered with buildings, leased a portion of that land to the plaintiffs for the purpose of erecting a warehouse and showrooms, for which purpose a large amount of light would be necessary, the plans which were approved by the defendants showed that there were to be windows in the external wall of the new buildings adjacent to the land retained by the plaintiffs. By another agreement the defendants undertook to demolish the buildings on the demised land. Some rafters and purlins of the buildings on the defendants' land were left projecting a few inches over the land leased to the plaintiffs, and they were supported by stanchions which stood partly on the plaintiffs' land. These purlins and rafters were, with the consent of the plaintiffs' architect, but without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs themselves, built into the external wall of the plaintiffs, which was built entirely on the plaintiffs' land. The stanchions were also grouted in to the wall, the plaintiffs' wall and the defendants' building being in fact connected. The local authority took proceedings against the plaintiffs to close the windows in that external wall, which they alleged had become a party wall through the acts of the defendants. The plaintiffs brought this action to restrain the defendants from using their wall and to compel them to remove the rafters and purlins from the wall.

Held, that the use by the defendants of the plaintiffs' wall which had led to the local authority's demand was a trespass and amounted to a derogation from their grant, and the injunction asked for was accordingly granted.

Held, also, that it was not within the scope of the plaintiffs' architect's authority to sanction the rafters and purlins being built into the plaintiffs' wall, and that the plaintiffs were not bound by it. —BETTS v. PICKFORDS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 476; 94 L. T. 363.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Justices—Bias—Reference of renewal of licence to quarter sessions—Licensing justice subsequently appointed to sit on compensation committee—Renewal of licence refused—Validity of order—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 1, sub-section 2; s. 5, sub-section 5.—When the justices of a licensing district acting under section 1, sub-section 2, of the Licensing Act, 1904, refer the matter of the renewal, with their report thereon, to quarter sessions, the reference to quarter sessions is not in the nature of an appeal. Therefore, although in a particular case a justice might have taken such an active part as a member of the licensing committee as to be ineligible, on the ground of bias, to sit at quarter sessions, there is nothing in the Act to prevent him taking part in the subsequent proceedings, since the report to quarter sessions is in the nature of a motion rather than a decision.—REX v. CHESHIRE JUSTICES, K.B.D., 482; [1906] 1 K. 4. Offences — Selling intoxicating liquor without licence—Offence of trifling nature—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 16.—For an incoming tenant of a public-house to carry on the business of the house for a period of nine days without a licence is a serious offence; and the facts that the outgoing tenant has been duly licensed, and that for nine days after his departure, the period in question, no sessions set at which a temporary transfer of his licence could be applied for, do not warrant a court of summary jurisdiction in treating the offence as one of a trifling nature within the meaning of section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.—BARNARD v. BARTON, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 357; 75 L. J. K. B. 326.

5. Provisional licence—Period of seven years—Confirming authority—Licensing Acts, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 13; 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 22; 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 4, sub-section 3.—Licensing Act, 1874, s. 22: "Any person interested in any premises about to be constructed . . . for the purpose of being used as a house for the sale of intoxicating liquors . . . may apply to the licensing justices and the confirming authority for the provisional grant and confirmation of a licence in respect of such premises. . . . A provisional grant and order of confirmation shall not be of any validity until it has been declared to be final by an order of the licensing justices. . . ."

Licensing Act, 1904, s. 4, sub-section 3: "The justices may, if they think fit, instead of granting a new on-licence as an annual licence, grant the licence for a term not exceeding seven years."

Held, that the powers of granting a provisional licence under section 22 of the Licensing Act, 1874, are applicable to the grant of a licence for a period of seven years under section 4, sub-section 3, of the Licensing Act, 1904; it is no objection to such a grant that the licence will not commence to run from or determine on the 5th of April of any year in accordance with section 13 of the Alehouses Act, 1828, as amended by section 33 of the Licensing Act, 1902.—REX v. JOHNSTONE, K.B.D., 347; [1906] 1 K. 7. Renewal of licence—House not required—Licensing justices delegating their powers to sub-committees—Report of sub-committee—Duty to communicate to licensee—Report of house to quarter sessions—Question as to other houses in neighbourhood not reported—Admissibility of—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 1, sub-section 2; s. 5, sub-section 2.—During the hearing of an application for the renewal of a licence before the committee of quarter sessions appointed for that purpose, questions were asked on behalf of the applicant for renewal, of a witness in cross-examination, whether it was not the fact that there were other licensed houses in the neighbourhood of the applicant's house the licensees of which had been convicted for offences against the licensing laws, and whether it was not the fact that other licensed houses in the neighbourhood were not so well conducted as the applicant's house, and generally as to the conduct and management of other licensed houses in the neighbourhood, which had not been referred to quarter sessions. The committee having disallowed the questions in so far as they related to houses the renewal of the licences of which had not been referred to quarter sessions,

Held, that the mere fact that the questions related to houses which had not been reported to quarter sessions, was not a sufficient reason for disallowing the questions and excluding the evidence, and that the answers to the questions ought to have been admitted.

The justices of a licensing district can make inquiry as to licensed houses in their district by means of sub-committees, provided that they afterwards bring the knowledge they so obtain to the notice of the persons interested.—MORGAN v. AYLESFORD JUSTICES, K.B.D.; 1906, 1 K. 8. Renewal of licence—Order for "alterations" in premises—Structural alterations—Order to keep entrance door locked—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 11. sub-section 4.—Section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902—which empowers licensing justices, on renewing a licence, to order that such alterations as they think reasonably necessary to secure the proper conduct of the business shall be made in that part of the premises where intoxicating liquor is sold or consumed—only gives power to the justices to order structural alterations.

Upon an application for the renewal of a licence the licensing justices, purporting to act under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902, made an order that the entrance door from one of two streets upon which the licensed premises abutted should be kept locked and not used except for certain purposes, the object being to confine the sale of liquor to that part of the premises which opened on to the other street.

Held, that this was not an order for a structural alteration, and was not within the power of the licensing justices under section 11, sub-section 4.—SMITH v. PORTSMOUTH JUSTICES, C.A., 598; [1906] 2 K. B. 229; 94 L. T. 407.

10. Sale of beer in unlicensed place—Liability of master for illegal act of servant—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94).—The respondent, who held an off-licence for the sale of beer at his brewery premises, employed a drayman to deliver beer. The drayman had no authority to sell beer, but only to deliver it, and he had been expressly forbidden to sell beer. The drayman, however, sold and delivered beer in the street contrary to the above orders.

Held, that the respondent was not liable to be convicted under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, for selling by retail intoxicating liquor at a place where he was not authorized to do so, as the drayman had no authority at all to sell beer.—BOYLE v. SMITH, K.B.D., 519; [1906] 1 K. LIMITATIONS, STATUTE of:—

1. Action in county court—Subsequent proceedings in respect of same cause of action in High Court—Concealed fraud—Misrepresentation—Knowledge of facts—Res judicata—Lapse of time—Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3.—In 1890 the plaintiff effected a policy of insurance on his life with the defendants, relying upon the inducements of its agent that (inter alia) he would have to pay only a fixed periodical premium.

In 1898 a claim was for the first time made on the plaintiff for payment of an increased premium. The plaintiff, being desirous not to forfeit his policy, paid the amount demanded under protest.

In April, 1898, he issued a plaint in the county court to recover a sum as an overpayment, but the county court judge, in May, 1898, decided that he was not entitled to succeed.

Meetings of policy-holders were held from time to time in 1900, when it was resolved to bring an action in the name of the plaintiff against the defendants. But it was subsequently determined to await the decision of the court in an action which had been insituted against the defendants by another policy-holder.

That other action was tried before Kekewich, J., in July, 1902, when his lordship held that the defendants had no right to increase the premiums as the age of the assured increased. The defendants appealed, and the Court of Appeal took a different view from that of Kekewich, J., but held that the policy was tricky and could be rescinded. The House of Lords, in July, 1904, affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal.

In September, 1904, the plaintiff issued his writ in the present action, claiming rescission of his policy on the ground of misrepresentations.

Held, that the county court judge having in May, 1898, decided what was the true meaning of the policy, and his decision not having been appealed from, the plaintiff must be taken to have known at that date what was the nature of the contract between the defendants and himself and all the facts which would have enabled him to bring an action for misrepresentation; and that the Statute of Limitations was therefore a bar to the present action, the period at which the statute began to run being that at which the plaintiff knew the facts, and not that at which he ascertained the proper construction to be placed upon them.

3. Share of an intestate's estate—Administration—Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 13.—Under a power of appointment conferred by a marriage settlement M. C. appointed a sum of £5,000, which her father had covenanted to bring into the settlement, to her son, J. F. C. He died a bachelor and intestate, whereupon his mother, M. C., and sister, E. M. P., became entitled to his estate in equal shares. The mother died in 1862, having appointed her daughter, E. M. P., her son-in-law, G. P., and J. C. C. to be her executors, and she gave to her daughter, E. M. P., a life interest in her share of J. F. C.'s estate. The sum of £5,000 was paid to E. M. P. and G. P. in 1864, and was treated by G. P. as his absolute property. G. P. died in 1884, and gave his wife, E. M. P., a life nterest in his property, and appointed F. P. to be his residuary legatee. E. M. P. died in 1903. In an action brought by the administrator of J. F. C. against the executors G. P. and legal personal representatives of F. P.,

Held, that the estate of G. P. was liable to the estate of M. C. for a moiety of the sum of £5,000, and that the Statute of Limitations did not run, because there had not been anyone in existence with a present right of receiving the share of the intestate's estate and capable of giving a discharge for the same, inasmuch as J. C. C, the co-executor with G. P. and E. M. P., although capable of giving a good discharge for the share, could not have recovered M. C.'s share in any proceedings which he might have taken against G. P. and E. M. P.—PARDOE, RE, MACLAUGHLIN v. PENNY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 210; [1906] 1 Ch. 265; 75 L. J. Ch. 161; 94 L. T. 88.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Board of guardians—Disqualification—Interest in contract—Time when guardian ceases to be a member —Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 46, sub-sections 1, 7.—A member of a board of guardians who is concerned in a contract entered into with the board is disqualified for being a member, and the disqualification does not cease by reason of the termination of the contract.—REX v. ROWLANDS, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 292; 75 L. J. K. B. 501.

2. Bye-laws—New street—Air space and ventilation —One "domestic building"—Occupation—Communication—Frontage—Tests of definition.—Defendants were proposing to erect a long construction on a strip of land extending for about a hundred yards from D.-road, within the district to which the bye-laws of the W. G. Urban District Council applied, along the G. N. Railway. The erection consisted of three blocks of stables and coach-houses with lofts above joined by two lower brick and slate "lean-to's" which were also suitable to be fitted as stables. There was communication from end to end leading to a garden and the termination of the stables remote from D.-road. On the remaining side there was a paved yard and fence. There was ventilation, but no "air space" on the side towards the railway. The bye-laws of the W. G. Urban Sanitary Authority required an open space of 24 feet in front and 200 square feet, exclusively belonging to such building, in the rear of any new domestic building. If the stables and coach-houses fronted on D.-road the bye-laws had been complied with. The council asserted that the erection constituted more than one building not fronting on D.-road, and that the defendants' plans infringed the bye-laws as to laying out new streets.

Held, that the erection constituted one building, and that the bye-laws as to air space were not infringed.

It seems that the fact that the erection might easily be adapted for occupation by more than one person will not prevent its being held to be one building, as the question must be dealt with on the facts as they exist, and the test of occupation is misleading. A better test is the existence of means of communication between the blocks, and the situation and control of the outer door.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MELVILLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 93 L. T. 612.

3. Constitution of county borough—Adjustment of financial relations between county and borough—Compensation to county—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 32.—Where a borough is constituted a county borough, and an adjustment respecting the financial relations between the county and the county borough is made under section 32 of the Local Government Act, 1888, compensation may be awarded to the county in respect of the cessation of the liability of the borough to contribute to the county funds for the maintenance of county bridges and main roads and for certain other miscellaneous expenses.

4. Contract for supply of water by one local authority to another—Sanction of Local Government Board—Enlargement of district—Penalty clause—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 61, 174 (2).—In 1882 the plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendants with the sanction of the Local Government Board under section 61 of the Public Health Act, 1875, by which the plaintiffs agreed to supply water to the defendants for certain places within their district. In 1895 the plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement for the supply to the defendants' district, or such part thereof as the defendants might wish to supply, or any place outside their district which for the time being they might contract to supply, of a certain quantity of water, the minimum amount being largely increased beyond the amount of the former contract. It was provided that unless the consent of the Local Government Board to the agreement was obtained within six calendar months, or such sanction was ascertained to be unnecessary, the agreement should be void. The board refused to give a general sanction in respect of the area comprised in the agreement.

Held, that the sanction of the board in 1882 referred only to the places mentioned, and no sanction having been given to the agreement of 1895 within the prescribed time, it was void.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J. ([1905] 1 Ch. 53), reversed.

Held, also (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that section 174, sub-section 2, of the Public Health Act, 1875, was directory only, and therefore the omission of any penalty clause did not render the agreements invalid.—SOOTHILL URBAN COUNCIL v. WAKEFIELD RURAL COUNCIL, C.A.; [1905] 2 Ch. 516; 74 L. 5. Diseases of Animals Acts—Inspector appointed by local authority—Sheep detained by inspector on suspicion of having sheep-scab—Negligence of inspector—Liability of local authority—Principal and agent—Sheep-scab Order, 1898, Arts. 2, 14—Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 57), ss. 2, 22, 35 (xiii.).—A veterinary inspector, who was appointed by a local authority under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of that Act and the orders of the Board of Agriculture made thereunder, detained a ram offered for a sale in a market belonging to the plaintiff under a mistaken suspicion that it was suffering from scab. In doing so the inspector was guilty of negligence, and the plaintiff was caused a loss.

Held, that the local authority were not liable to make good the loss so occasioned to the plaintiff, because the order of the Board of Agriculture in question, under which the inspector purported to act, imposed the duty on the inspector, and not upon the local authority.—STANBURY v. EXETER CORPORATION, K.B.D., 247; 75 L. 7. Public health—Cleansing of cesspools—Construction—"And" whether conjunctive or distributive—Bye-laws—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 42 and 44.—The Public Health Act, 1875, s. 42, enacts: "Every local authority may, and when required by order of the Local Government Board shall, themselves undertake or contract for . . . the cleansing of earth-closets, privies, ashpits, and cesspools."

Held, that the word "and" is to be read distributively, and that the local authority therefore have power to undertake the cleansing of earth-closets, privies, and ashpits without undertaking the cleansing of cesspools.—STAINLAND INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY v. STAINLAND URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D., 282; [1906] 1 K. 8. Rating—Light railway—"Used only as a railway"—Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 12, sub-sections 1, 2—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, sub-section 1 (b).—Section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which gives the power to levy district rates provides (sub-section 1 (b)) as follows: "The owner of any tithes . . . or the occupier of any land used as arable meadow or pasture ground only . . . and the occupier of any land covered with water or used 'only' as a canal or towing-path for the same, or as a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance, shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof."

Held, that the word "only" must be read with "railway."

Section 12, sub-section 1, of the Light Railways Act, 1896, provides: "The Clauses Acts, as defined by this Act, and the enactments mentioned in the second schedule to this Act, shall not apply to a light railway authorized under the Act except so far as they are incorporated or applied by the order authorizing the railway." Sub-section 2: "Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Act and to any special provisions contained in the order authorizing the railway, the general enactments relating to railways shall apply to a light railway under this Act in like manner as they apply to any other railway; and, for the purposes of these enactments and of the clauses Acts, so far as they are incorporated or applied by the order authorizing the railway, the light railway company shall be deemed a railway company, and the order this Act a special Act, and any provision thereof a special enactment. . . ."

A light railway was constructed under an order made in pursuance of the Light Railways Act, 1896, the following clauses of the order being material: (16) Notwithstanding anything in this order contained the company shall not acquire or be deemed to acquire any right other than that of user of any road along or across which they lay the railway. (17) Nothing in this order or in any bye-law made under this order shall take away or abridge the right of the public to pass along or across every part of any road along or across which the railway is laid with carriages not having flange wheels or wheels suitable only to run on the rails of the railway. (49) The company may use on the railway carriages with flange wheels or wheels suitable only to run on the rails of the railway, and subject to the provisions of this order, the company shall have the exclusive use of the railway for carriages with flange wheels or other wheels suitable only to run on the rails of the railway. (50) If any person (except by agreement with the company, or otherwise as by the order provided) uses the railway, or any portion thereof, with carriages having flange wheels or other wheels suitable only to run on the rails of the railway, such person shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds.

Held, that the land occupied by the lines of the rails of the light railway was land used only as a railway, and that the light railway was a railway constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament for public conveyance within the meaning of section 211 (1) (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875.—WAKEFIELD LIGHT RAILWAY v. WAKEFIELD CORPORATION, K.B.D., 495; [1906] 2 K. Local Government Act, 1894, s. 25 (1): "As from the appointed day, there shall be transferred to the district council of every rural district all the powers, duties, liabilities . . . of any highway authority in the district, and highway boards shall cease to exist and rural district councils shall be the successors . . . of the highway authority."

Held, that a drain formerly under the control of a highway board did not become a "sewer" after the coming into operation of section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, although but for section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it would have been a "sewer" within the meaning of that Act.—ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS v. DURHAM RURAL COUNCIL, K.B.D., 491.

A charitable institution, therefore, which provides free lodgings is not a "common lodging-house" within those Acts, as people are not harboured or lodged there for hire in accordance with the definition in section 3 of the Act of 1860.

The principle laid down in Logsdon v. Booth, 48 W. R. 266, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401, and Logsdon v. Trotter, 48 W. R. 365, [1900] 1 Q. B. 617, followed. —GILBERT v. JONES, K.B.D., 94; [1905] 2 K. B. 691; 74 L. J. K. B. 929; 93 L. T. 520.

Held, that the children of one of the next-of-kin dying in the life of the lunatic were not liable to bring into hotchpot the sums so received by their parent.

4. Vesting order—Criminal lunatic—Jurisdiction—Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), s. 5—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), ss. 136, 340, 342.—Under section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1850, the court had power to make a vesting order when any person was entitled jointly with any lunatic or person of unsound mind, words which included a criminal lunatic. The Act of 1850 was repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 342: "The Acts mentioned in the fifth schedule are hereby repealed to the extent set forth in the third column of the same schedule. Provided that this repeal shall not affect any jurisdiction or practice established, confirmed, or transferred, or salary or compensation or superannuation secured by or under any enactment repealed by this Act."

Sections 136 and 341 of the Act of 1890 in substance re-enact section 5 of the Act of 1850 as regards any trustee who is a lunatic or person of unsound mind, but section 340, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1890 enacts that, "save as in this Act otherwise expressly provided, this Act shall not extend to criminal lunatics."

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make a vesting order in the case of a criminal lunatic, inasmuch as the jurisdiction exercised under section 5 of the Act of 1850 was preserved by the saving clause, section 342 of the Act of 1890.—R., RE, C.A., 578; [1906] 1 Ch. 730; 75 L. 2. "Marvo"—Sale of butter substitute otherwise known as margarine—Margarine Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 29), s. 3.—The respondent went into the appellant's shop and asked for half a pound of "Marvo," and was served with a substance from a box labelled "Margarine," which substance, before being handed to the respondent, was wrapped in paper on which was printed in ½in. letters "Margarine." Inside the package was found a slip on which was printed: "Marvo (registered by Act of Parliament). Without this slip none is genuine"; and behind the counter was a notice: "Notice.—'Marvo,' the new butter substitute, equal in flavour to the finest dairy butter. To comply with the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act is sold as 'Margarine.'"

Held, the appellant had not sold a substance prepared in imitation of butter under a name other than margarine, within section 3 of the Margarine Act, 1887.—TANNER v. DYBALL, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 539.

MARKET:—

Toll — Bye-law — Hawking — Manufacturer of mineral waters calling on customers.—By a bye-law of the borough of D., "every person or persons who shall hawk or expose about the town for sale" certain articles should pay a toll.

The respondent, who was in the employ of a manufacturer of mineral waters at R., brought into the borough of D. a van laden with mineral waters. He called at the houses and shops of regular customers to sell and deliver to them any mineral waters they might require. The goods were not cried in the street, and no effort was made to attract casual customers.

Held (dissentiente Darling, J.), that the respondent had not hawked or exposed about the town for sale the mineral waters, within the meaning of the bye-law.—PHILPOTT v. ALLRIGHT, K.B.D.; 94 L .T. 540.

MARRIAGE:—

1. Contract—Marriage brokage contract—Illegality—Contract to procure introductions to persons generally—Part performance—Right to recover back money paid under contract.—A marriage brokage contract is not confined to a contract for reward to procure an introduction to a particular person with a view of marriage, but includes a contract to procure introductions to persons generally with a view to marriage; and the court will order money paid under such a contract to be repaid, even though some step has been taken by the other party towards the performance of the contract.

2. Marriage by repute—Divided repute—Illicit commencement—Evidence—Presumption.—A. and B. lived together with two children from about 1878 to 1893. They were generally reputed to be husband and wife, and the children their lawful children, although there was some evidence dividing the repute. The eldest child, a daughter, was born in 1873 in her maternal grandmother's house, and registered by B. in her maiden name. The second child, a son, was born in 1879, while A. and B. were living together, and was registered in A.'s name. No record of any marriage could be found.

Held, that A. and B. had been husband and wife, but that the son was their only legitimate child.—HAYNES, RE, HAYNES v. CARTER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 94 L. T. 431.

MASTER AND SERVANT:—

1. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Defence of no claim being made within statutory period—Evidence of claim—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 2—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898-1900, r. 17.—On the 4th of November, 1902, the applicant, while engaged in taking a pulley off a shaft at the works of the respondents, by whom he was employed as engineer, placed the pulley on some steps, and as he descended the steps the pulley fell upon his head and fractured his skull. After a month's absence he returned to work with his employers, by whom he was dismissed in May, 1903. In November, 1903, he became totally incapacitated from work, and was eventually confined in a lunatic asylum, where he now was.

In October, 1905, his wife on his behalf applied for compensation. The respondents by their answer, which followed F. 8 in the Appendix to the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898-1900, stated that they desired to bring to the notice of the judge the fact that on the 9th of December, 1902, the applicant accepted £2 in full satisfaction of all claims in respect of the accident, and a receipt in writing for the same was signed by the applicant. The respondents stated further that they intended to rely on the fact that the claim for compensation was not made within six months from the occurrence of the accident, and they denied their liability to pay any further compensation. At the hearing before the deputy county court judge the receipt referred to in the answer was not put in evidence. The judge held that there was no evidence of a claim being made within the statutory period, and dismissed the application.

The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal, being of opinion, having regard to the terms of rule 17 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898-1900 and to the principles laid down by Lord Halsbury in Powell v. Main Colliery Co., [1900] A. C. 371, that the particulars of demand and the answer under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, ought not to be construed with the same strictness as if they were pleadings in the High Court, and they thought that the statement in the answer that £2 had been paid by the respondents in full satisfaction of all claims in respect of the accident afforded some evidence of a claim for compensation having been made within the time.—LOWE v. MYERS & SONS, C.A.; [1906] 2 K. B. 265; 75 L. J. K. B. 651.

2. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Contract of employment—Contract not to be terminated without notice—Closing of works—Implied term of contract to find work for workman—Claim for wages—Custom—Reasonableness of.—The plaintiff was in the regular employment of the defendants at their tinplate works as a rollerman; he was employed in doing piecework, and was paid according to the amount of work he did, and the terms of his employment were partly contained in printed rules applicable to all the workmen, one of which provided that no person regularly employed should quit or be discharged from the works without giving or receiving twenty-eight days' notice in writing. On the 20th of July, 1903, the defendants, without notice, shut down their works upon the ground that they could not get orders at remunerative prices. On the 3rd of August they gave the usual twenty-eight days' notice to terminate the contract, and and this notice expired and terminated the contract with the workmen on the 31st of August. The plaintiff attended the works on the 20th of July, but received no work, and earned no wages between that date and the 31st of August, when his contract expired by the notice. He claimed wages for that time upon the ground that until the contract was put an end to on the 31st of August the defendants were bound in law in to provide him with a reasonable amount of work, and thereby enable him to earn wages. The defendants set up the defence that they were not bound in law to provide the plaintiff with work, and, further, they set up a custom in the tinplate trade by which employers were entitled to shut down their works if they could not obtain orders at remunerative prices.

Held, both upon principle and authority, that, apart from custom, it was an implied term of the contract that the plaintiff was entitled to have, and the defendants were bound to provide the plaintiff with, a reasonable amount of work and wages until the termination of the contract by the notice; that upon the facts the alleged custom set up by the defendants had not been established, and that, even if it had been established, it would not be a reasonable custom.—DEVONALD v. ROSSER, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 274.

3. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dependant—Desertion by husband of wife—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 2; First Schedule, s. 1, sub-section 2.—A. was married to B. in 1882, and lived with her till June, 1905. He then left her owing to a quarrel, being at the time out of work. He took with him one child, whom he subsequently sent back to B. After A. left her B. supported herself, partially by occasional work and partially by charity of relatives. Within three months from the time A. left B, A. met with an accident, resulting in his death, he having been at the time in employment for three weeks, during which he did not contribute to his wife's support.

Held, B was wholly dependent upon her deceased husband within section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—COULTHARD v. CONSETT IRON CO., C.A., 139; [1905] 2 K. B. 869; 75 L. J. K. B. 60; 93 L. T. 756.

4. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dependants—Partial dependency—Amount of compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (ii.).—A workman was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. During the last three years his weekly earnings had been 19s. 10½d., and his wife earned 1s. 10½d. a week in addition. They had no other means of living. His widow having claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as in part dependent upon his earnings within Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (ii.), to the Act, the employers contended that in order to arrive at the sum which would be "reasonable and proportionate to the injury to" the widow within the meaning of the clause, the amount required to maintain him in his lifetime must be deducted from his earnings, and the maximum sum payable as compensation must be proportionately reduced. The county court judge awarded £150.

Held, that the principle for the assessment of compensation was the same as in the case of total dependency, except that in the case of partial dependency the applicant's other source of income should be taken into account; that the amount required to maintain the deceased man in his lifetime did not enter into the calculation, and that the county court judge had not misdirected himself in assessing the compensation at £150.—OSMOND v. CAMPBELL, C.A., 117; [1905] 2 K. 5. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment in agriculture—Agricultural work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 22), s. 1, sub-sections 1 and 3.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, it appeared that the applicant was a carpenter, that he was employed on a farm as the farm carpenter, that he acted as gamekeeper for three months in the year, and that he helped in such work as harvesting, rick-making, and carting.

Held, that there was evidence which justified the county court judge in finding that the applicant was employed in agriculture within the meaning of the Act of 1900.—SMITH v. COLES, C.A., 81; [1905] 2 K. B. 827; 75 L. J. K. B. 16; 93 L. T. 754.

6. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment in coal mine—Gradual injury to hand and knee—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1 (1).—One coal miner was incapacitated for work by "beat hand," and another by "beat knee." "Beat hand" is an injury caused by an abscess gradually produced by the jar, friction, or pressure to the hand caused by using the pick; and "beat knee" is an injury caused by an abscess in the knee gradually developed by long-continued kneeling whilst at work. Both are common injuries in the ordinary course of work in a coal mine.

Held (dismissing the appeals), that the injuries were not caused by "accident" within the meaning of section 1 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—MARSHALL v. EAST HOLYWELL COAL CO., C.A.; 93 L. T. 360.

7. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment "on or in or about" an "engineering work"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—An "engineering work" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, means a work carried on in a definite area, or areas, but such areas need not necessarily be contiguous.

The respondents were contractors, and had undertaken the work of reconstructing a tramway which ran through the streets of a town. New rails for the tramway were brought to the town by railway, and, by an arrangement between the respondents and the railway company, were unloaded and stacked in a yard belonging to the railway company till they were required for use on the tramway. The appellant was employed by the respondents in unloading and stacking the rails in the yard when he met with an accident. The yard abutted upon a street through which the tramway would ultimately run when completed, but at the time of the accident no work on the tramway was actually going on, at any point nearer than 700 yards from the place where the accident happened.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), Lord Loreburn, L.C., and Lord James of Hereford dissenting, that the appellant was not, at the time of the accident, employed "on or in or about" an "engineering work" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. 1897.—BACK v. DICK, KERR, & CO., H.L.; [1906] A. 8. Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Engineering work—Construction—Mechanical power—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 2.—A. contracted with B. to erect a machine on the third floor of B.'s building. C., who was in the employment of A., had to superintend the carrying out of the work. The machine was delivered in parts at B.'s building, and the heavy parts of the machine were raised to the third floor by pulleys, whilst the lighter parts were carried up by the lift, to work which mechanical power was required. When all the parts were on the third floor, and whilst C. was engaged in erecting the machine, for which no mechanical power was required, a piece slipped and injured C.

Held, the erecting of the machinery was a distinct and separate part of the contract from the delivery of the parts on to the third floor. The erection alone constituted the "construction" within the meaning of the statute, and as no mechanical power was required for that purpose, the injured workman was not entitled to compensation under the Act.—MURPHY v. O'DONNELL, C.A., 149.

9. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation Engineering work—Repair of tramway—Area of the undertaking—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant was employed by a municipal corporation, who were the owners of an electric tramway, in the work of repairing the overhead wires when necessary. Having done some repair at a point on the tramway, he was proceeding with a machine which he used in the work to another point on the tramway about three-quarters of a mile distant for the purpose of doing some repair there. When he was about 200 yards away from the first point, and while he was either on or in close proximity to the tramway, he was accidentally injured.

Held, that, inasmuch as there was evidence on which the county court judge could find that the obligation of the corporation to repair extended to the whole area of the tramway, he was justified in holding that at the time of the accident the applicant was employed on, in, or about engineering work—viz., the repair of the tramway.—ROGERS v. CARDIFF CORPORATION, C.A., 35; [1905] 2 K. B. 832; 75 L. J. K. B 22; 93 L. T. 683.

10. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Engineering work"—Repairs—Machinery driven by mechanical power—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7.—A workman in the employ of a firm whose business was the manufacture of lifts, was sent by them to examine and repair an hydraulic lift at Blenheim. While repairing it, and while availing himself of the hydraulic power of the lift itself, partly to put him in a position to carry out the repairs, and partly to test how far they had been effective, he met with an accident in consequence of an unexpected movement of the lift, for which he had been awarded compensation by the county court judge.

The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal.—TULLOCK v. WAYWOOD & Co., C.A.; [1906] 2 K. B. 261; 75 L. J. K. B. 557.

11. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Engineering work—Tramway, alteration of—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A workman was employed by a contractor who had entered into a contract with a telephone company to carry telephone wires across and under a certain street. The telephone company had statutory power to carry the wires under the street. Two tramway lines, one up and one down, were laid along the street. The contractor made a trench from one side of the street as far as the outside rail of the down line, and also a trench in the space between the up and down lines, and was proposing to connect these two trenches by means of a hole under the down line for the purpose of carrying the wires. One of his workmen was engaged in making the hole by means of an iron bar when a passing tramcar killed him. His widow claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, upon the ground that at the time of the accident the deceased workman was employed on or about engineering work—namely, the alteration of the tramway. The county court judge found that the work was not an alteration of the tramway, and that the Act did not apply.

Held (by Collins, M.R., and Mathew, L.J., Romer, L.J., dissenting), that the space between the up and down lines was part of the tramway, and that, as there was a physical alteration in the surface of the street at that place, the deceased man was employed on or about the alteration of the tramway, and the Act applied.—ADAMS v. SHADDOCK, C.A., 97; [1905] 2 K. B. 859; 75 L. J. K. B. 7; 93 L. T. 725.

12. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Gas mains—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A workman was employed by a gas company in opening up a road under which a gas main was laid so as to get at the main. While doing so he was injured by an accident. The gas company owned the gasworks where the gas was manufactured and the mains under the roads in the district which were connected with the gasworks and were used for distributing the gas to the consumers' houses. The place where the accident happened was about a quarter of a mile from the gasworks, and there was no steam, water, or other mechanical power used there. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it was admitted that the gasworks themselves were a factory.

Held, that the gas mains did not form part of the factory, and that the applicant was not employed on or about a factory when the accident happened.—SPACEY v. DOWLAIS GAS AND COKE Co., C.A., 138; [1905] 2 K. B. 879; 75 L. J. K. B. 5; 93 L. T. 685.

13. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Serious and wilful misconduct"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—The fact that the consequences of an act of misconduct are serious is not enough to make it "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

A workman was killed in a lift in his employers' workshop. Workmen were forbidden to use the lift except under conditions which did not exist in this case, and there was no evidence as to how he came to be in the lift, or how the accident happened.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that there was no evidence that the workman had been guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct" so as to deprive his widow of the right to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—JOHNSON v. MARSHALL, SONS, & Co., H.L.; 94 L. 14. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Shipwright—Ship moored to jetty of dock—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7.—A workman employed to do repairs in a ship, which, though attached to the jetty of a dock by a rope, is wholly waterborne, and is not making use of the dock in any way, is not a workman entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, inasmuch as the person sued is not the occupier of a factory, and, therefore, not an "undertaker" within the Act.

16. Wrongful dismissal—Damages for—Duty of judge — Justification — Jury. — Misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal, but there is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will suffice.

In cases of alleged wrongful dismissal, where the trial takes place before a judge and jury, it is for the judge to direct them by informing them of the nature of the acts which as a matter of law justify dismissal, and he may guide them by calling their attention to the facts material to the determination of the issues raised.—CLOUSTON & Co. v. CORBY, P.C., 382; [1906] A. METROPOLIS:—

1. Building—Party structure—Interference—Notice—Railway company—Demolition of building for purposes of station—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 5 (31), 90 (1)—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), ss. 16, 45—Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. ccxiv.), ss. 5, 31.—A railway company in the metropolis acquired land for "extraordinary purposes" under section 45 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, and for the purposes of constructing a station proceeded to demolish the building standing thereon under the powers conferred upon them by their special Act, but without having given to the adjoining owner the notice required to be given by a "building owner" by section 90, sub-section 1, of the London Building Act, 1894. An action for an injunction having been brought by the adjoining owner to restrain interference with the party-wall, Held, that the railway company were not exempted either by the terms of their special Act or by section 201, sub-section 8, of the London Building Act, 1894, from the provisions of section 90, sub-section 1, of the latter Act as to notice.

Held, also, that no substantial interference with the party structure had in fact taken place, and that therefore the railway company was not a "building owner" within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 31, of the London Building Act, 1894.—LEWIS & SOLOME v. CHARING CROSS, EUSTON, AND HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 435; [1906] 1 Ch. 508; 75 L. J. Ch. 282; 94 L. T. 732.

2. Bye-law—Daily removal of house refuse—Notice to occupiers to place movable receptacles on kerbstone—Refusal of sanitary authority to remove refuse placed elsewhere—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 16 (2), 30.—A bye-law made by the London County Council under section 16, sub-section 2, of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, provided that where a sanitary authority arrange for the daily removal of house refuse in their district, or any part thereof, the occupier of any premises in such district, or part thereof . . . shall at such hour of the day as the sanitary authority shall fix . . . deposit on the kerbstone or on the other edge of the footpath immediately in front of the house or in a conveniently accessible position on the premises as the sanitary authority may prescribe by written notice served upon the occupier, a movable receptacle in which shall be placed for the purposes of removal by . . . the sanitary authority of the house refuse." A sanitary authority issued notices under the bye-law to the occupiers of all houses in a certain area in their district requiring each occupier to deposit on the kerbstone or edge of the foothpath in front of his house a movable receptacle containing the house refuse. The respondent was occupier of a detached house situated within the prescribed area of the notice, which had a garden in front and was approached by a carriage drive. He refused to comply with the notice to place his house refuse on the kerbstone, but was willing to place, and did place, the refuse receptacle in a conveniently accessible position on his front premises. The sanitary authority refused to take it away unless the receptacle was put on the kerbstone, and the respondent thereupon took proceedings against the authority under section 30 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

Held, that the sanitary authority was not empowered under the bye-law to give a general notice to every occupier of premises within a particular area to place the refuse receptacle on the kerbstone for removal, and their refusal to remove the house refuse of this particular occupier from what was found as a fact to be a conveniently accessible position on his premises was a refusal without reasonable cause within the terms of the section.

Semble, that it was no objection to the validity of the bye-law that the placing of the receptacles on the kerbstone would cause a temporary obstruction of the highway. — WANDSWORTH BOROUGH v. BAINES, K.B.D., 457; [1906] 1 K. B. 470; 75 L. J. K. B. 158; 94 L. T. 211.

3. Bye-law — Litter in streets — Repugnancy to statute. — By a bye-law of the London County Council made under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888: "No person shall sweep or otherwise remove from any shop, house, or vehicle into any street any waste-paper, shavings, or other refuse, or, being a costermonger, newsvendor, or other street trader, throw down and leave in any street any waste-paper, shavings, or other refuse. . . . Any person who shall offend against any of these bye-laws shall be liable for each offence to a fine not exceeding 40s."

An information was preferred within the metropolis for contravening this bye-law, which was dismissed on the ground that the bye-law was ultrà vires as dealing with a nuisance already punishable when the bye-law was made, under section 60 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, which imposes a penalty on any person "who in any thoroughfare shall throw or lay . . . any litter or rubbish."

Held, that the bye-law was good.—BATCHELOR v. STURLEY, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 539.

4. Dangerous structure—Party-wall—Party-wall in dangerous state—Inspection by district surveyor—Right of council to two sets of fees for inspection—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 113; Schedule 3, Part 2.—A party-wall separating the premises of two adjoining owners became dangerous, and the steps prescribed by the "dangerous structures" provisions of the London Building Act, 1894, were duly taken with regard to it, and an inspection of the party-wall was made by the district surveyor. The county council paid to the district surveyor two sets of fees in respect of his inspection of the party-wall, which was the dangerous structure in question, and claimed to recover the two sets of fees from the owners. They had already recovered one set of fees from one of the owners.

Held, that the party-wall was only one dangerous structure within the meaning of the Act, and that the county council were entitled to recover only one set of fees in respect of the surveyor's inspection of the same.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHEINMAN, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 505.

5. Excavation for gas pipes—Making good and reinstating—Insertion of concrete course—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 111, 114—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 82.—A gas company having opened certain streets for the purpose of laying, altering, and repairing their pipes, the local authority thought it expedient to fill in the ground and make good the surface under section 114 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, instead of permitting the work to be done by the gas company. In order that the surface of the street should be made as good and remain as good as it was before, the local authority inserted a course of concrete where there was no concrete before, and where there was concrete before put in an extra thickness of concrete. The magistrate found the insertion of such concrete was reasonable and necessary.

Held, that the local authority could recover from the gas company the cost of such concrete.—COMMERCIAL GAS CO. v. POPLAR CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 222.

6. Formation of or laying out new street—Conditions of sanction by London County Council—Erection of new building upon either side or upon site abutting upon roadway—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.).—C. was the owner of a piece of land bounded by two railways, the only approach being through a tunnel under one of the railways. He submitted to the L.C.C. a plan for a proposed road which was to go through the tunnel (which was to be widened) and across the piece of land, and to cross the railway on the other side of the land by a bridge and to run from thence into a highway.

The sanction of the L.C.C. to this plan was given on the condition that the road should be clearly defined and thrown open as a highway within a certain time, and that no new building should be commenced to be erected upon either side of such roadway, or upon a site abutting on such roadway, unless such roadway had been defined and thrown open throughout its entire length, and other conditions had been complied with.

Owing to the fact that C. had been unable to come to terms with the railway company with regard to the widening of the tunnel and the building of the bridge, he had been unable to comply with the requirements of the L.C.C., but he leased a piece of the land and proceeded to erect thereon a factory and dwelling-house, giving his lessee right of access over the site of the proposed road, which was then a cart trackway, and thence over the intervening piece of land. The nearest point of the plot of land so leased to the site of the proposed roadway was 187ft. He also proceeded to put fresh clinkers upon the roadway, and extended the sewer up the roadway, with which the drainage of the factory was connected.

Held, that C. had not commenced to form or lay out the new street or roadway sanctioned by the L.C.C., and that he had not commenced to erect new buildings upon either side of such roadway, or upon a site abutting on such roadway.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. COLLINS, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 540.

7. House refuse—Removal of—Trade refuse—Refuse of hotels—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 30, 141.—Ashes from the grates, sawdust from the kitchen floors, empty sauce bottles and tins from the kitchen, straw cases for bottles, tea leaves, waste paper, egg shells, lemon peel, dust from rooms and staircases, small quantities of broken crockery and glass, being the refuse of an hotel, is "house refuse" within the meaning of sections 30 and 141 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and not "trade refuse."—WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. GORDON HOTELS (LIMITED), K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 39; 75 L. J. K. B. 438; 94 L. T. 521.

8. New road—Frontage—Apportionment of expenses—Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862.—Where the local authority by resolution, in pursuance of the powers vested in them by the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, apportioned the expenses of paving a new road among all the owners of the frontage, and subsequently revoked such apportionment and, by a fresh resolution, apportioned such expenses among a certain number of owners, making a merely nominal charge in respect of the remaining owners, Held, that such subsequent apportionment was wrong in principle and invalid. — ELSDON v. HAMPSTEAD CORPORATION, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 43; [1905] 2 Ch. 633; 75 L. J. Ch. 27; 93 L. T. 335.

9. Open space—Hoarding or screen—Adjoining landowners—Access of light—Building—Metropolitan Open Spaces Acts, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 35), s. 1; 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 34), s. 5; 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), s. 4—Disused Burial-grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), s. 3.—Under the Metropolitan Open Spaces Acts, 1877, 1881, and 1887, and the Disused Burial-grounds Act, 1884, a local authority is entitled to erect a screen upon an open space of which it has the control, and thereby prevent an adjoining owner from acquiring by prescription a right to an access of light to his windows over such open space.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 114, [1903] 2 Ch. 556) reversed, and that of Buckley, J. (51 W. R. 109, [1903] 1 Ch. 109), restored.—PADDINGTON CORPORATION v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 317; [1906] A. C. 1; 75 L. J. Ch. 4; 93 L. T. 673.

10. Paving—Passage not being a thoroughfare—Requirement of owner to pave a second time with different material—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 99, 100.—The owner of a court, passage, or public place, not being a thoroughfare, who has once in obedience to a notice in that behalf under section 100 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, paved or covered the same to the satisfaction of the vestry, cannot be called upon a second time to pave or cover it with a different material; all he can be required to do is to repair the existing pavement or covering.—HARRISON v. OWNER OF NEW-STREET-MEWS, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 703; 75 L. J. K. B. 510.

11. Paving new street—"Intersection"—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77.—At the junction of two streets, B.-walk and W.-road, was a granite crossing which was on the soil of W.-road, and it connected the footpath on the side of W.-road at the junction with B.-walk.

Held, that this granite crossing was "paving at the points of the intersection" of the streets within section 77 of the Local Management Act, 1862, and rightly charged on the frontagers of B.-walk when that street was being paved.—BRIDGETT v. WANDSWORTH CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 519.

12. Poor—Provision of casual wards—Metropolitan Common Poor Fund—Land on which wards built—Payments for lands.—The H. Union acquired in 1838 and 1849 certain land upon which were erected casual wards, the money for their erection having been borrowed, which was repaid by instalments out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. The H. Union sought to recover the value of the land out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in the half year ending Michaelmas, 1903,

Held, that this sum could not be recovered in one half year, and rules nisi, directed to the auditor who had disallowed the item, for a certiorari to quash the disallowance, and for a mandamus to grant a certificate of allowance, accordingly quashed.

Quære, whether the H. Union were not entitled to the fair value of the land for the half year out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.—REX v. MOWATT, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 789.

13. Privy—Emptying of—"Street or public place"—Privy on private property adjoining public road—Emptying of during prohibited hours—Offence—Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 60, sub-section 4.—Section 60 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, provides that "Every person who in any street or public place within the limits of the metropolitan police district shall be guilty of any of the following offences shall be liable to a penalty"—that is to say, (4) "Every person who shall empty . . . any privy between the hours of six in the morning and twelve at night."

Held, that the provision in sub-section 4, as to the emptying of privies, is not limited to the case of privies which are actually in "any street or public place," but applies to and includes the case of privies which are in private property, but which closely adjoin "any street or public place"; and, therefore, a person may be convicted under the sub-section who, during the prohibited hours, empties a privy situate on private property some forty yards from the nearest street or public place.—HOWARD v. DANIELS, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 669.

14. Public health — Drain communicating with sewer—Nuisance—Taking up and relaying drain—"Reconstruction" or "repair"—Bye-laws—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 202. —The London County Council made a bye-law that a person who should entirely or partially reconstruct any pipe or drain communicating with a sewer should deposit plans of the proposed work, with the proviso that plans should not be required in the case of any repair which did not involve the entire reconstruction of the pipe or drain; and another bye-law as to ventilation, which was to apply to every person who should reconstruct in an existing building any pipe or drain communicating with a sewer.

Premises situate in the metropolis were drained at the rear by a line of pipes which took the surface water drainage of the premises through two gullies in the yard and which communicated with the sewer. This line of pipes was not laid upon concrete and was not ventilated, and, the drain having become a nuisance, notice was served on the owner to abate the same. The owner opened up the ground, took up the pipes, most of which were defective or broken, and relaid the drain in the same line upon a foundation of concrete. He put in four new lengths of pipes and a new gully and connection, replacing in the drain one old pipe and gully only, and leaving in the ground an old pipe which was not defective.

Held, that the work done to the drain was a "reconstruction" of the drain, and not merely a "repair" of it, and that the bye-laws applied.—AGAR v. NOKES, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 605.

15. Public health—Public convenience—Approaches—Subway—Trepass—Sub-soil of roadway and footway—Injunction—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 44.—By the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891, s. 44, power was given to the sanitary authority to construct and maintain public sanitary conveniences, and for this purpose the subsoil of the roadway, exclusive of the footway adjoining a building, was vested in the sanitary authority.

Where the sanitary authorities had made such conveniences in the roadway beneath the soil connected by a subway from pavement to pavement, with an exit in the footway adjoining respondents' premises, and who were owners of the soil ad medium filum, an injunction was granted directing the sanitary authorities to remove that portion of the structure only which encroached upon the footway. In other respects the matter was in the discretion of the authorities.

Decision of Joyce, J., to this effect (50 W. R. 268, [1902] 1 Ch. 269) restored, and that of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 596, [1904] 1 Ch. 759) reversed (Lord James of Hereford dissenting).—WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., H.L., 129; [1905] A. C. 426; 74 L. J. Ch. 629; 93 L. 16. Street—Widening—Compulsory powers—House—Adjudication to take whole—Part to be thrown into street—Prior agreement to re-sell surplus portion subject to right of pre-emption—Bona fides—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix), ss. 80, 96.—An adjudication under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act is only binding if, after considering the facts, the local authority giving the notice bonâ fide believes that the property adjudicated to be necessary is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the proposed widening: Gard v. Commissioners of Sewers, 28 Ch. D. 486, 33 W. R. Dig. 106, and Lynch v. Commissioners of Sewers, 34 W. R. 226, 32 Ch. D. 72, followed.

When the local authority wishes to take the whole of a house, but the owner only desires them to take part, the question to be determined is whether what will be left will be a house, regard being had to the work by way of shoring and reconstruction which the owner is willing to do.

Quære, can a local authority under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act acquire some only of the several interests in the premises which go to make up the freehold.—DENMAN v. WESTMINSTER CORPORATION, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 345; [1906] 1 Ch. 464; 75 L. J. Ch. 272; 94 L. T. 370.

17. Street—Widening streets—Compulsory purchase—Sub-lessee—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), ss. 80, 96.—Where a local authority took a house let in separate floors for street widening under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, s. 80, the owner of the ground-floor is not necessarily entitled to restrain the local authority from taking more than is wanted to be thrown into the street. Where the danger, inconvenience, and excessive cost of severance resulted in a bonâ fide adjudication that it was necessary to acquire the whole building, this was not vitiated by a prior agreement to re-sell the surplus portion, subject to the owner's right of pre-emption under section 96.

19. Structure—Projection beyond general line of buildings—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 22; s. 73, sub-section 8.—An iron framework affixed to the front wall of a building by means of bolts and stay rods, was filled in on the front and sides with leaded glass, and covered on the top with zinc, came forward about 4 feet 6 inches from the front wall of the building, the bottom being about 11 feet above the pavement.

Held, that the iron framework was not a "building structure" within the meaning of section 22, sub-section 1, of the London Building Act, 1894, and following Hull v. London County Council, 49 W. R. 396, [1901] 1 K. B. 580, that it was not a "projection" within section 73, sub-section 8, of that Act.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SCHEVZIK, K.B.D., 168; [1905] 2 K. B. 695; 74 L. J. K. 20. Thames—Alteration—Removing part of bank to repair—Metropolis Management (Thames River Prevention of Floods) Amendment Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. cxcviii.), s. 23.—By section 23 of the Metropolis Management (Thames River Prevention of Floods) Amendment Act, 1879: "From and after the passing of this Act, if any person make any alteration to any bank, so as to affect the security of the premises upon which the same is situate, or of any other premises adjacent or near thereto, from flooding caused by the overflow of the River Thames, without the previous sanction in writing of the board, such person shall be liable to a penalty. . . ."

It became necessary to repair part of a bank which the respondents were liable to repair and maintain, and to replace certain old piles and camp shedding by new in the same or similar positions, and to do so the respondents removed certain portions of the timber capping and 2ft. in height of the camp shedding.

Held, that this was not an "alteration to any bank" within the meaning of the section.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 72; 75 L. J. K. B. 613; 94 L. T. 773.

21. Thames—Sewers—District sewer constructed by vestry with consent of the Sewer Commissioners draining houses directly into the Thames—Notice to discontinue drainage—Houses connected up with main drainage system—Expenses—Liability—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 135 —Amending Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 104), s. 1.—At the time of the passing of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a group of houses in London near the Thames were drained into the river by means of a drain constructed with the consent of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers. In 1903 the Thames Conservancy gave notice requiring the plaintiffs, who were the successors of the vestry, to discontinue the passage of sewage into the Thames from this drain, and it was agreed by the plaintiffs and the defendants that the only practical mode of complying with the notice was to bring the sewage into the metropolitan main drainage sewer in the neighbouring street The necessary work was then done by the plaintiffs, and the action was brought to decide whether they or the London County Council, as the successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works, should bear the expense.

Held, that as the London County Council were not under any legal obligation to provide means of preventing the sewage of houses from passing into the river, the declaration of their liability asked for by the plaintiffs for the expenses of constructing the new sewer must be refused.—WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 616; 75 L. It appeared on the face of the summons that the information was laid by and the summons issued to the respondent on behalf of the borough council, whereas in fact the inspector had not obtained the express consent of his council to issue the summons.

Held, that the conviction was not bad ab initio, as the words "on behalf of the borough council" could be rejected as surplusage, since a private individual could institute proceedings before justices under the above section.

MINES:—

1. Lease — Construction — Covenant to "fairly, duly, and honestly win" the whole of the coal demised. —The respondents let to the appellants for twenty-one years a seam of coal lying under certain land belonging to them, at an annual rent of £100 per acre of coal gotten in any one year, as soon as the lessees should begin working the coal, and until then at an annual rent of £5.

The lease contained a covenant by the lessees that they would at all times during the term "fairly, duly, and honestly win, work, recover, obtain, and get the whole of the . . . seam of coal hereby demised in a proper and workmanlike manner."

The lease prohibited the sinking of a shaft on the land demised, or breaking open the surface, and it was in the contemplation of both parties that the lessees would get the coal by underground workings from an adjacent colliery belonging to them.

The lessees endeavoured to work the coal, and spent a considerable amount of time and money in attempting to reach it, but found that in consequence of faults in the strata it could not be worked except at a heavy loss, whereupon they abandoned the working.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the obligation to work the coal was absolute, and that the words "fairly, duly, and honestly" only applied to the method of working after the coal was reached, and that the lessors were entitled to damages for breach of the covenant.—CHARLESWORTH v. WATSON, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 14; 75 L. J. K. B. 137; 94 L. T. 6.

2. Right of support to surface—Inclosure of common —Award—Reservation of manorial rights—Working of mines—Compensation—Inclosure Act (31 Geo. 2, c. x).—In cases where the minerals under land belong to one person and the surface of the land to another, the law presumes that the surface owner has a right to support, unless the language of the instrument regulating the rights of the parties, or other evidence, clearly shows the contrary, either by express words or necessary implication.

Therefore in a case in which by an Inclosure Act and award certain waste land of a manor was allotted among the commoners, and it was provided that nothing contained in the Act should be construed to diminish the rights of the lord of the manor in respect to his seignory and royalties, except in respect of his ownership of the soil to be inclosed; and, further, that the lord and his successors should hold and should enjoy all mines and quarries under the waste, together with liberty of searching for, winning, and working the same as fully and freely as if the Act had not been passed, and that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the nature of the commoners' interest having been extended by the Act, the owner of the minerals must so work them as not to damage such interest by depriving the surface owners of the right of support to which they were entitled at common law, there being nothing in the Act to deprive them of such right.

MONEY-LENDER:—

1. Contracting while unregistered—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), ss. 1 and 2.—Section 2 (1) (c) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, applies to a money-lender who has not registered himself under the Act, and consequently has no "registered name"; and he cannot sue upon any contract made by him while unregistered, the contract being illegal.—VICTORIAN DAYLESFORD SYNDICATE v. DOTT, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 231; [1905] 2 Ch. 624; 74 L. J. Ch. 673; 93 L. T. 627.

2. Definition—Exception—"Business not having for its primary object the lending of money"—Discounting bills of customers and friends—Financing a business—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 6, sub-section (d).—A. carried on business as an art dealer for many years prior to 1903, and in the course of his business it was necessary and incidental thereto to give long credit and to take from his customers bills in payment of the amounts they owed to him for their purchases, and to discount and renew the bills from time to time. In 1903 he retired from the business and sold off his stock by public auction, and took bills for the greater part of the purchase-moneys, which he discounted and renewed from time to time, and some of which were still running. After his retirement he carried on business as an expert art valuer and adviser, and he also assisted two art businesses, in which he was largely interested, by discounting for them their customers' bills and by taking bills for the interest from time to time due on the debentures he held in one of those businesses. He also assisted some old friends in the curio trade, and a few persons with whom he had been connected in business, about ten in all, with loans and by discounting bills for them. He did not advertise as a money-lender, and did not discount bills for outsiders. In an action by A. on bills given him in 1904 for a loan made by him to an old customer, Held, that A. was not, and never had been, a money-lender within the meaning of section 6 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900; and that, as to the bills given on the sale of his stock and renewed and still running, he came within exception (d) in the section.—LITCHFIELD v. DREYFUS, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 584; 75 L. J. K. B. 447.

3. Excessive rate of interest—Harsh and unconscionable transaction—Absence of risk—Reopening of transaction—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1.—P., a widow, was in 1903 in need of a loan. Against the advice of her solicitors, she authorized an architect, with whom she had become acquainted, to obtain it for her; and he eventually obtained an advance of £1,000 at 45 per cent. per annum from a registered firm of money-lenders, on the security of a second mortgage of certain life interests and a reversion to which P. was entitled under settlements and of a life policy which was comprised in the first mortgage, which was to an insurance company. P.'s total income under the settlements amounted to about £1,200 a year; but it was reduced to £600 by the interest and premiums payable on the first mortgage and policy.

The solicitor of the money-lenders having threatened to enforce the security by sale, P. in 1904 obtained through her solicitors a loan at 5¼ per cent., and discharged the claims of the money-lenders. She brought an action against them to obtain the reopening of the transaction on the ground that it was harsh and unconscionable and the rate of interest excessive, and repayment of the excess of interest paid by her.

Held, that the rate of interest was excessive and the transaction harsh and unconscionable, and that the defendants must repay all interest paid above 10 per cent.—PART v. BOND, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 93 L. T. 49; C.A., 94 L. T. 390.

4. Name not registered—Contract—Validity—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 2, sub-sections 1 (a) (c), 2.—Section 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, applies to an unregistered money-lender so that he cannot make a valid "agreement in the course of his business as a moneylender with respect to the advance and repayment of money, or take any security for money in the course of his business as a money-lender."

5. Transaction harsh and unconscionable—Right to relief—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1.—The defendant borrowed from the plaintiffs, who were registered money-lenders, £150, giving promissory notes, one of £150 payable in twelve monthly instalments of £12 10s., and another for £72 payable in six monthly instalments of £12. The defendant at the date of the transaction owed £150 to other creditors. He had an income of £1,000 a year and property valued at £9,000. The defendant was a man of business and thoroughly understood the transaction, and there had been no misrepresentation by the money-lenders.

Held, that the defendant was not entitled to relief under the Money-lenders Act, 1900.—CARRINGTONS v. SMITH, K.B.D., 424; [1906] 1 K. B. 79; 75 L. J. K. B. 49; 93 L. T. 779.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Bankruptcy—Act of—Defaulting stockbroker—Securities mortgaged to bank—Knowledge by mortgagee of the act of bankruptcy—Right to redeem—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 49.—A firm of stockbrokers became defaulters on the Stock Exchange, and, in pursuance of the rules of the Stock Exchange, the official assignee of the Stock Exchange collected their assets.

The firm had previously lodged with a bank various stock and share certificates as security for a loan by the bank. The bank was aware of the assignment to the official assignee of the Stock Exchange.

On these facts, and on the assumption that the assignment in question constituted an available act of bankruptcy,

Held, that the bank, on being tendered by the stockbroker and the official assignee payment in full of the amount due on the security, was compellable to deliver up the securities to them.

2. Foreclosure—Proviso for redemption—Interest—Default in punctual payment.—By an indenture, dated the 30th of January, 1900, certain freehold and leasehold premises were mortgaged to secure £10,000 together with interest at 5 per cent. The operative part of the deed was "the mortgagor doth hereby covenant with the mortgagee that he will on the 1st of January, 1914, pay to the mortgagee the sum of £10,000 with interest that may be then due for the same at the rate of £5 per centum per annum, and will hereafter from the date thereof, so long as the said sum of £10,000 or any part thereof shall remain unpaid, pay interest for the same at the rate aforesaid by equal half-yearly payments on the 1st of January and the 1st of July in every year." There was a proviso: "Provided always, and it is hereby agreed that if the mortgagor shall on every half-yearly day on which interest is hereinbefore made payable under this security until the 1st of January, 1914, or within twenty-one days of such days respectively, pay to the mortgagee interest at the rate aforesaid, the mortgagee shall not call in the sum of £10,000 before the 1st of January, 1914," and that the mortgagor should not be entitled to pay off the £10,000 before the 1st of January, 1914. "Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared that if the mortgagor pay the said sum of £10,000 with interest for the same in the meantime at the rate aforesaid that may be due and unpaid, the mortgagee shall at any time thereafter upon the request and at the cost of the mortgagor reconvey and reassign the premises to the mortgagor or as he shall direct."

Interest was paid on the 28th of July, 1905, instead of the 1st of July, 1905.

The mortgagee on the 26th of July, 1905, gave notice calling in the money. The money due on the 1st of January, 1906, had been paid.

The mortgagee applied for foreclosure, and submitted that the mortgagor was only entitled to redeem if punctual payment was made on every half-year until the 1st of January, 1914.

Held, that no condition was imported into the proviso for redemption having reference to the intermediate payments. No condition had been broken, and the right to foreclosure had not arisen. —WILLIAMS v. MORGAN, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1906] 1 Ch. 804; 75 L. J. Ch. 480; 94 L. T. 473.

3. Lease by mortgagor in possession—Power to accept surrender—Concurrence of mortgagee—Action by mortgagee for recovery of rent—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 18 (1).—A lease for twenty-one years, granted by a mortgagor in possession under the statutory power conferred upon him by section 18 (1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, cannot be effectively surrendered so as to affect the rights of the mortgagee under the lease without the concurrence of the latter.—ROBBINS v. WHYTE, K.B.D., 105; [1906] 1 K. 4. Licensed premises—Compensation money for loss of licence—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 2. —A brewery company specifically mortgaged its freehold and leasehold property, including a leasehold beerhouse, the Running Horse, to trustees as security for certain debentures, which were not redeemable until 1920. The company also gave a floating charge on all its property not specifically mortgaged. The licensing authorities refused to renew the licence of the Running Horse, and compensation was awarded in respect thereof under the Licensing Act, 1904. The trustees thereupon claimed the money as coming within their mortgage, while the company claimed the money as being property over which they had granted the the floating charge.

Held, that the trustees were entitled to receive the money as being part of their mortgage security, but that they could not apply the money in reduction of the mortgage debt until the security became enforceable, and that until then the brewery company were entitled to the income derived from the investment of the money.—LAW GUARANTEE AND TRUST SOCIETY v. MITCHAM AND CHEAM BREWERY CO., *Ch.D. 5. Mortgagee in possession—Redemption—Rests—Accounts—Sale of part of the mortgaged property—Proviso for capitalization of interest—Right to compound interest.—A mortgagor who enters into possession and receives the rent of the mortgaged property is not entitled to the benefit of a provision in the mortgage deed for the capitalization of interest in the event of its being in arrear, provided that at the date of the interest becoming due there is in the hands of the mortgagee rent sufficient, after making all proper deductions, for the payment of the interest, even though no appropriation of such rent to payment of interest has ever been made.

6. Ship—Invalid mortgage—Registration of—Power of court to expunge from register.—Where a transfer of an interest in a ship, void by reason of fraud or for any other cause, has been registered, the court has power, by virtue of its inherent jurisdiction, to rectify the register by ordering the entry of the void transfer to be expunged.—BROND v. BROOMHALL, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 571; 75 L. J. K. B. 548.

7. Valuation of property for mortgage—Liability of valuer to mortgagee—Contractual relation—Exercise of reasonable care and skill—Duty.—C., a solicitor, was applied to by V., who was not his client, but who owned certain properties, to find someone who would advance money on the security of the same. C. knew that R., another solicitor, who represented the plaintiff under a power of attorney, had money to advance, and at an interview between C. and R. it was arranged that an advance, to be guaranteed by an insurance society, should be made to V., but no stipulation for an independent valuation of the properties was then made. C., with authority to conduct the mortgage on these lines, requested an insurance society to insure the mortgage, knowing that the society usually employed the defendant, a local valuer of repute. C. applied to the society for a copy of the defendant's valuation, and this application was ultimately acceded to by them, they saying that on future occasions when C. was acting for the mortgagee he should have a copy. The society repudiated responsibility for the defendant's fee, which was afterwards paid by V. through C. The society instructed the defendant to value the properties, and he reported to them by a valuation written on their printed form. C. relied, to the knowledge of the defendant, on his valuation in making the advance on mortgage to V.

Held, that no contractual relation of principal and agent between the plaintiff and the defendant was established; that the defendant never agreed to value for the use of the plaintiff; and that therefore the plaintiff had not established any duty on the part of the defendant towards him to exercise reasonable care and skill in and about the valuation.

8. Will—Exoneration—Locke-King's Acts (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34)—Real Estate Charges Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 69).—A testator, by clause 9 of his will, devised the X estate to specific devisees. By clause 14 he devised the Y estate and all other real and personal estate not by will or codicil otherwise disposed of to trustees on trust for sale and conversion. By clause 15 he directed the trustees to pay out of moneys arising from sale and ready money his debts, except charges and mortgage debts (if any) on property specifically devised, which debts were to be paid primarily out of the property charged therewith. At the dates of the testator's will and death the only mortgage was on the Y estate.

Held, that, the Y estate not being specifically devised within clause 15 of the will, there was a "contrary intention" within the Real Estate Charges Act, 1867, and that the mortgage on the Y estate must be borne rateably by the mixed residuary fund.—VALPY, RE, VALPY v. VALPY, *Ch.D. 1. Conviction for driving at a dangerous speed, "having regard to all the circumstances of the case"—Appeal to quarter sessions—Evidence of traffic reasonably expected to be on highway—Admissibility—Motor-car Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. 36).—The appellant was convicted for driving a motor-car in a public highway at a speed which was dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. On appeal to quarter sessions evidence was given on behalf of the respondent as to the traffic which might be reasonably expected to be on the highway.

Held, that the evidence was admissible.—ELWES v. HOPKINS, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 1; 75 L. J. K. B. 450; 94 L. T. 547.

3. Refusal by owner of driver's name and address—Conviction—Omission of averment that driver committed an offence—Motor-car Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. 36), ss. 1, 60—Motor-cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, art. IV. (6).—A conviction of an owner of a motor-car under section 1, sub-section 3, of the Motor-car, 1903, stated that the defendant "being . . . the owner of a certain motor-car . . . which was then being driven upon the highway . . . did unlawfully . . . after due notice had been given to him, refuse to give the name and address of the person who was then and there driving the same, such name and address being required in order that proceedings might be taken against him under section 1 of the Motor-car Act, 1903, and Art. IV. (6) of the Motor-cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904."

Held, that the conviction was bad, in that it did not sufficiently allege that the driver had committed an offence under the section.

Held, also, that it was not a condition precedent to the duty cast upon the owner of a motor-car by section 1 (3) to furnish the name and address of the driver of the car, that the driver should previously have been asked for and should have refused to give his name and address.—REX v. HANKEY, K.B.D., 80; [1905] 2 K. 4. Speed—Speed exceeding twenty miles an hour—Evidence of rate of speed by constable as shown by stop-watch—Sufficiency—"Opinion of one witness" merely—Motor-car Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. 36), s. 9.—Upon the hearing of an information under section 9 of the Motor-car Act, 1903, for driving a motor-car on a public highway at a speed exceeding twenty miles an hour, a police sergeant proved that he placed a police constable at a certain point on the road and stationed himself on the same road at a distance of a quarter of a mile from the constable; that, when the motor-car passed the constable, the constable signalled to him and he immediately started the second hand of his stop-watch and stopped the same when the car passed him; and that the time taken by the car between the two points as shown by his stop-watch was 31⅔ seconds, or at the rate of twenty-eight an hour.

The stop-watch was produced in court and not objected to.

The only evidence as to the rate of speed was that of the police sergeant, who gave evidence of the time as shown by his stop-watch.

The defendant having been convicted,

Held, that the evidence of the police sergeant was not evidence of his "opinion" merely, but was evidence of the fact recorded by his stop-watch as to the time taken in travelling over the distance, and that therefore the defendant was not convicted "merely on the opinion of one witness as to rate of speed" within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 1, of the Act.—PLANCQ v. MARKS, K.B.D.; 94 L. NATAL, LAW of :—

Roman-Dutch law—Power of attorney executed by lunatic—Validity—Knowledge of mortgagee.—By the Roman-Dutch law prevailing in Natal an insane person is not capable of binding himself by contract, and therefore a mortgage bond passed by virtue of a power of attorney executed by an insane person is not legally enforceable if the mortgagor derived no benefit from the bond even though the mortgagee had no knowledge of the insanity.

Judgment of the court below reversed.

The Roman-Dutch law allows a person who has in good faith expended money on behalf a lunatic to be repaid his expenditure.—MOLYNEUX v. NATAL LAND AND COLONIZATION CO., P.C.; [1905] A. C. 555; 74 L. J. P. C. 108; 93 L. T. 59.

NEGLIGENCE :—

1. Construction of drain—Overflow on neighbouring land—Trespass—Municipal authorities liability—

Statutory powers.—In 1889 the appellant corporation, under their statutory powers, took over the care and management of a watercourse and made it into a public drain. Later on there was an overflow over the respondent's land, which adjoins the drain, and this was occasioned by the then insufficiency of the drainage, though the works were large enough for the purpose in 1889.

Held, that the corporation had acted negligently, and were liable in damages for the injury caused to respondent's land owing to the overflow.—HAWTHORN CORPORATION v. KANNULUIK, P.C., 285; [1905] A. C. 105; 75 L. J. P. C. 7; 93 L. T. 644.

2. Landlord and tenant—Lodger—Boarding-house keeper—Duty to take care of guest's baggage.—The plaintiffs, husband and wife, were received as guests into the defendant's boarding-house. Having valuable jewelry with them, and finding that there was only one key to their bedroom door, they asked for a second key; but they were informed by the manageress that only one key was supplied, and that it must not be taken away, and that they need be under no apprehension for the safety of their valuables, as every one living in the house was well known. They also complained of the absence of any key to the chest of drawers in their room, but no suce key was provided. The jewelry was stolen from the room by another guest, who was a thief known to the police, and who had been received by the defendant as a guest into the boarding-house without any reference.

Held, that the defendant was under some obligation to take reasonable care in the matter of the protection of the plaintiffs' goods which they had with them in the boarding-house; and that the facts raised a question for a jury whether there had not been a failure of reasonable care on the part of the defendant to which the loss of the plaintiffs' jewelry was attributable.

Per Collins, M.R., and Mathew, L.J.—A boarding-house keeper is under an obligation to take ordinary care of his guest's baggage.

Per Romer, L.J.—A boarding-house keeper is bound to carry on his business with reasonable care, having regard to the nature and normal conduct of the business as known to the guest, or as represented to the guest by him; and if by reason of a breach of that duty on his part the guest's baggage is lost, the boarding-house keeper is liable to the guest for the loss.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Acquisition of land for public purposes—Public Works Act, 1900 (No. 26 of 1900), s. 131—Right to take part of a house.—The prohibition in the Public Works Act, 1900, against taking compulsorily part only of a house or other building for public purposes applies in the case where land is acquired by notification in the Gazette as well as in the case where it is acquired by notice to the parties interested.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—WILLIAMS v. PERMANENT TRUSTEE CO., P.C.; [1906] A. C. 249; 75 L. J. P. C. 48; 94 L. T. 354.

2. Contract—Interest—Person holding civic office—Sydney Corporation Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, No. 35), s. 24.—By section 24 of the Sydney Corporation Act, 1902, "Any person who, while holding any civic office under this Act, continues to be or becomes directly or indirectly, by means of partnership with any other person or otherwise howsoever, knowingly engaged or interested in any contract, agreement, or employment with or on behalf of the council, except as a shareholder . . . shall be liable to a penalty . . . and shall be disqualified from holding any civic office."

While the respondent held a civic office under the Act, a firm in which he was a partner supplied timber to a firm of H. & Co., in accordance with quotations prievously given, to be used by them in carrying out a contract with the council. The respondent was aware of the purpose for which H. & Co. required the timber.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that he was not interested in the contract within the section.—NORTON v. TAYLOR, P.C.; [1906] A. C. 378; 94 L. T. 591.

3. Servants of Crown—Payment by Colonial or Imperial Government. — A Colonial Government represents the Crown, and supplies granted by a Colonial Legislature are granted to the Crown, as much as supplies granted by the Imperial Legislature.

Therefore where a soldier contracted to serve in a colonial contingent at fixed rate of pay, and while he was on active service received pay from the Imperial Government,

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the Colonial Government were entitled to deduct the pay already received by him from the Imperial Government from the amount due to him from the Colonial Government for his services.—WILLIAMS v. HOWARTH, P.C.; [1905] A. NUISANCE:—

1. Noise — Crowded neighbourhood occupied by printing trade — Private resident — Injunction. — A trade not carried on in the particular and established manner of a district devoted to that trade principally, and causing serious disturbance to a resident in that district by making noises in excess of those made by carrying on the trade in the particular and established manner of the trade of the district constitutes a private and actionable wrong which may be restrained by injunction. There can be no prescriptive right to commit a nuisance constituting a private and actionable wrong.—RUSHMER v. POLSUE & ALFIERI (LIMITED), C.A., 161; [1906] 1 Ch. 234; 75 L. J. Ch. 79; 93 L. Section 27 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowers local authorities to construct works for the disposal of sewage, "provided that no nuisance be created."

The corporation proceeded to construct sewage works approved by the Local Government Board.

Upon action brought for an injunction to restrain the corporation from creating a public and private nuisance by smell, and also from sending an effluent of improperly treated sewage from their works into a natural stream in breach of section 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875,

Held, that the corporation had created both a public and a private nuisance by their works, and that as their local order was merely a direction to them to exercise their powers under section 27 of the Public Health Act, 1875, an injunction must be granted.

Held, also, that the effluent was a breach of section 17 of the Public Heath Act, 1875, for which an action was maintainable by the Attorney-General, but, the breach having been remedied, no injunction was granted.

1. Action to restrain threats of legal proceedings—Lapse of patent—Validity of patent—Infringement—Practice—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 25, rr. 4, 5—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.—The defendants, L. F. Co., who were the owners of a patent which expired in 1903 for an improved boiler flue, brought an action for infringement against a firm, D. & Co., and finally obtained judgment in their favour in the House of Lords. L. F. Co. then threatened to take proceedings for infringement against the plaintiffs, who had purchased boiler flues from D. & Co., and commenced proceedings. L. F. Co. also brought an action against another firm, C. & Co., in which the defence was raised that the patent was invalid, and thereupon L. F. Co. gave an undertaking not to sue C. & Co., and stayed all proceedings. They also discontinued the action against the present plaintiffs, who thereupon asked for a similar undertaking to that given to C. & Co., which was refused. The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present action for a declaration that the patent was invalid, and that they had not infringed any rights of the defendants, also alleging that they had suffered damages by the threats of the defendants. The point as to whether the plaintiffs were entitled to relief, assuming that the patent was invalid, was ordered to be tried first.

Held, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, as the mere threat to commence proceedings would not give rise to a right of action, and that the plaintiffs' proper remedy was a petition for the revocation of the patent under section 26 of the Patent Act, 1883, notwithstanding that the patent had expired.—NORTH-EASTERN MARINE ENGINEERING CO. v. LEEDS FORGE CO., Ch D. Joyce, J., 370; [1904] 1 Ch. 324; 75 L. J. Ch. 178; 94 L. T. 56.

2. Infringement—Repair—Specification—Approximate fit—Combination.—The owners of a patent for a wheel rim of a particular shape, intended to hold a solid india-rubber tyre without pinching or cutting it, and without wires or bands to secure it in its place, claimed the wheel rim in combination with a tyre fitted into it, and brought an action against a firm of india-rubber manufacturers alleging they had infringed the rights of the patentee.

The specification said the tyre was to be made so as to "approximately fit" the rim, but it appeared that, while the base of the rim was flat, it was necessary that the tyre should be made convex where it fitted on the base of the rim, and that it should be made one-eighth larger than the corresponding area of the rim, and then it would require machinery to force it into the rim.

Held (affirming the decision of Swinfen Eady, J. (92 L. T. Rep. 564, [1905] 1 Ch. 451), that the specification did not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention and the manner in which it was performed, and the patent was therefore bad.—SIRDAR RUBBER CO. v. WALLINGTON & CO., C.A.; [1906] 1 Ch. 252; 75 L. J. Ch. 233; 94 L. T. 183.

3. Infringement—Sale of article by licensee—Rights of purchaser—Estoppel.—The Statute of Monopolies (21 Jac. 1, c. 3) confers on a patentee the sole privilege by himself, his agents, or licensees, and no others, of making, using, exercising, and vending the invention. When a patentee sells the article patented to a purchaser, the purchaser, in the absence of conditions imposed by the patentee, receives an implied licence to use the article in any way the purchaser pleases.

If, however, a licensee of the patentee, in breach of the conditions of his licence, sells to a purchaser, it is immaterial whether the purchaser is ignorant or not of the conditions. He is in either event an infringer of the patent, and liable accordingly.

PERPETUITY:—

Appointment — Construction — Cross-remainders — Vested or contingent—Contingent remainders for life. —A lady having power under her marriage settlement to appoint the legal estates in certain real property to her children after her death, appointed by her will that the income and rents "shall be equally divided during their respective lives between my daughters A. and L. after my decease, and in the event of the death of either the survivor shall receive the whole income or rents," and after the death of the survivor she directed the property to be sold.

Held, that upon the construction of the instrument the remainders given on the death of either of the daughters to the survivor were contingent and not vested remainders, for that they could not be vested remainders because one of them must necessarily fail to fall into possession; and that consequently the gift of the entirety of the rents and profits upon the death of either daughter to the survivor was void for remoteness.—WHITBY v. LUEDECKE, *Ch.D. PHARMACY ACTS:—

Poisons — Alleged illegal sale to a person then unknown to seller — Rankin's Ointment — Vermin killer—Resolution that article be deemed poison—Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), ss. 2, 17. —By resolution passed in pursuance of section 2 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain declared that "vermin killers" should be deemed to be poisons under Part II. of the schedule to the Act. The appellant was convicted of selling a vermin killer, which was a compound article containing a percentage of a poison included in Part I. of the schedule, "to a person then unknown to him, and who was not introduced to him by some person known to him," contrary to section 17 of the above Act.

Held, that the conviction was wrong, because the society had power to declare what articles should be deemed to be poisons under Parts I. and II. respectively of the schedule to the Act.—BROWN v. LEGGETT, K.B.D., 362; [1906] 1 K. B. 330; 75 L. J. K. B. 193; 94 L. T. 200.

POLICE:—

Pension—"Approved service"—Continuous service —Diligent and faithful service—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), ss. 1, 4, sub-section 12.—By section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, "every constable in a police force if he has completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service . . . shall . . . be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life." By section 4, sub-section 1, "approved service" means "such . . . as may be certified by the police authority to have been diligent and faithful service"; and by sub-section 2 a certificate of the chief officer of the police force, as to the period of a constable's approved service, is to be sufficient evidence thereof.

Held, that the twenty-five years of service entitling to a pension might be made up of two or more distinct periods, that the chief officer's certificate was conclusive as to the duration of that service, but that the police authority had to certify as to the character and nature of the service, and might produce evidence to support their contentions.

POOR LAW:—

1. "Deserted" wife — Misconduct of wife — Poor Removal Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 55), s. 3—A wife while living with her husband in the parish of Lambeth, in the Lambeth Union, gave way to drinking habits, and in order to obtain drink she used to pawn her husband's goods, and she neglected the children of the marriage. On several occasions she spent, for purposes other than that for which it was intended, the money given to her by her husbnnd in order to pay the rent of the house, and she conducted herself in a manner which rendered it impossible for her husband to keep a respectable home for his children. He thereupon told her that they must part for a time, and that she must find another lodging, and he gave her sufficient furniture to furnish a room. Accordingly when she found another lodging she left his house, and he made her an allowance. Some months afterwards he discovered that she had committed adultery, and he thereupon stopped her allowance, and she went to live with a man in a parish in the Southwark Union, where she lived for such a time as would, if she were a widow, have rendered her exempt from removal. The wife having become chargeable to the City of London Union, Held, that she had been "deserted" by her husband within the meaning of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1861, and that therefore she was, by her residence in a parish in the Southwark Union, exempt from removal therefrom.

2. Guardians—Liability for negligence of servant to pauper inmate — Common employment. — The plaintiff, who was inmate of the union workhouse belonging to the defendants, was ordered by the labour master to assist in an enlargement of the electric light installation which was being carried out under the order of their engineer, who was a permanent official of the workhuse. In the course of the work the plaintiff went on to some staging which collapsed, owing to its improper construction, and the plaintiff was thrown to the ground and sustained severe injuries. It was admitted that the engineer was reponsible for the staging.

Held, that the plaintiff was not prevented by the doctrine of common employment from recovering, as he was bound to do the work, and had not voluntarily undertaken its risks.

Held, further, that the action was maintainable as the work was not being carried out by the defendants in the discharge of their administrative duties.—TOZELAND v. WEST HAM UNION, K.B.D.,

During this time the receiver in lunacy of her estate paid the whole of her income to the guardians in part payment of arrears of maintenance.

Held, that this was sufficient payment on account to enable the guardians to recover all such arrears from the lunatic's estate after her death.

By residence T. B. acquired a settlement in the W. H. Union. In February, 1901, T. B. and E. B. and the paupers left W. H. and went to reside in the P. Union, and resided there until the 16th of June, when T. B. died. E. B. continued to reside in the P. Union until the 8th of June, 1904, upon which date, having previously given notice to her landlady of her intention to quit, she left the P. Union for the purpose of looking for employment, and went to reside, while looking for employment, at a house in the W. H. Union. During her residence in the P. Union subsequently to the death of T. B., E. B. was was constantly in receipt of outdoor relief from the guardians of the P. Union, and on the 16th of March, 1903, one of the paupers was admitted to the parochial schools situate in the W. H. Union; and on the 23rd of August, 1903, the other pauper was admitted to the receiving home for children situate in P., and subsequently was removed to the above-mentioned parochial schools. The paupers were boarded and educated at the schools at the expense of the P. Union, and on the 8th of January, 1904, when E. B. left the P. Union, the paupers were living at the schools. They continued to live there and were boarded and educated therein up to the 7th of February, 1905, when an order of removal was made of the paupers from the P. Union to the W. H. Union, at which date E. B. was in the employment of the W. H. Union, and was residing in the W. H. Union.

In such case the two separate periods of residence, before his departure and after his return cannot be added together for the purpose of making up the three years' residence necessary to confer a settlement under that section, although the time during which a person is serving as a soldier is by section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, to be excluded from the computation of the time for the purposes of that section.

E. N. (who was illegitimate), while under sixteen, resided with her mother for three years in the parish of West Ham under circumstances which rendered her irremovable from that parish and settled therein. After attaining sixteen she had acquired no new settlement.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—Execution—Conflict of laws—Domiciled foreigner—Will and codicils valid according to the law of domicil, but invalid according to English law—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 9, 10, 27.—A lady domiciled in France, on whom a power of appointment by will had been conferred by an English instrument, made a will, valid by the law of her domicil but not attested as required by the Wills Act, by which she appointed a universal legatee with a general bequest of personalty. The will contained no express reference to the power and no express direction that it was to be construed according to English law.

Held, that the power had not been exercised, as the will, though admitted to probate, was not, owing to noncompliance with the provisions of the Wills Act as to attestation, a will to which the rules of construction contained in section 27 of the Wills Act as to the execution of powers applied.

2. Power of attorney — Power coupled with an interest — Revocation — Manager — Evidence — Additional consideration to that expressed in document—Specific performance.—Where a power of attorney was given by the owners of an estate to an agent to enter into possession and to manage the estate, to receive the rents and profits and to pay the debts of the owners, and possession was taken by the agent, and some time afterwards the power of attorney revoked and possession demanded,

Held, that the power of attorney was revocable, although the agent had, with the consent of one of the owners, given a personal guarantee to the mortgagee of the estate to pay the mortgage debt on the day of redemption, and (even if the authority were irrevocable) the owners were entitled to recover possession of the property.—FRITH v. FRITH, P.C., 618; [1906] A. C.*, 1883, ord. 65, r. 14 (d).—Where, in a probate action instituted in 1905, the court ordered the plaintiff's costs "to come out of the estate of the deceased," there being no personal estate, it was Held, that, having regard to section 3 (2) of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the order operated to charge the deceased's real estate with the payment of the costs.—VICKERSTAFF, RE, VICKERSTAFF v. CHADWICK, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 414; [1906] 1 Ch. 762; 75 L. J. Ch. 419; 94 L. T. 463.

2. Appeal out of time—Delay—Neglect to bring matters before court.—The Judicial Committee will not allow an appellant who is out of time for appealing against an order to make a fresh application for the same thing to the court below in order to bring himself within time for appealing against the second order.

Where there has been great delay on the part of an appellant in the assertion of his alleged rights, and he has neglected to bring all the facts known to him properly before the court below, the Judicial Committee will not extend the time for appealing. —GRIEVE v. TASKER, P.C.; [1906] A. 3. Costs—Claim for injunction and damages—Satisfaction of claim for injunction during progress of action—Judgment at trial for £10 damages—Plaintiff's right to costs—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 116.—In this action the plaintiff claimed damages for breach of a covenant contained in a lease not to make any alteration in the demised premises, and also an injunction restraining the breach. During the progress of the action the defendant restored the premises to their former condition. At the trial the plaintiff recovered £10 damages with costs to be taxed, but did not ask for an injunction as the defendant stated that he did not intend to interfere again with the premises.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, did not apply, and that the plaintiff was entitled to costs upon the High Court scale.—DOHERTY v. THOMPSON, C.A.; 94 L. T. 626.

4. Costs—Further security for costs—Application after trial—Summons for directions—Application by way of notice—Proper method by fresh summons—Ord. 30, rr. 2, 5; ord. 65, r. 6.—After trial and judgment the proper method to proceed in an interlocutory matter is by a fresh summons, and not by notice under the summons for directions.

The plaintiff in an action brought for a declaration of partnership and for an account had been ordered to give security for costs. At the trial it was ordered that the accounts between the parties should be taken by the official referee. The defendants applied by notice under the summons for directions that the plaintiff should be ordered to give further security for the costs to be incurred in the inquiry before the official receiver.

Held, that the application must be refused, as the summons for directions, under which the notice was given, was put an end to by the trial and judgment.—BROWN v. HAIG, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 26; [1905] 2 Ch. 379; 74 L. J. Ch. 591; 93 L. T. 99.

8. Counterclaim — Plaintiff — Action brought in Chancery Division—Counterclaim for slander—Trial by jury—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 36, rr. 2, 7—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 100.—Where an action is properly brought in the Chancery Division a defendant who raises by counterclaim issues of slander, libel, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage, is not entitled to have all the issues of fact in the action tried by a judge with a jury as of right under rule 2 of order 36, that rule not applying to the case of a counterclaiming defendant. But in such a case the court will, in the exercise of the discretion given by rule 7 of the same order, direct the issues raised by the counterclaim, to which rule 2 would apply if the counterclaim were an original action, to be tried by a judge with a jury, the original action and any other issues raised by the counterclaim being tried in the Chancery Division in the ordinary way.—KINNAIRD v. FIELD (No. 2). C.A., 85; [1905] 2 Ch. 361; 74 L. 10. Discovery — Interrogatories — Libel — Action against proprietor of newspaper—Plea of fair comment—Information on which libel founded—Name of informant.—Where in an action of libel against the proprietor of a newspaper the defendant pleads fair comment, the plaintiff is entitled to interrogate the defendant as to the information on which the alleged libel was founded, but not as to the name of the informant.—PLYMOUTH MUTUAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. TRADERS' PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, C.A., 319; [1906] 1 K. 11. Discovery of documents—Conduct of action taken over by plaintiffs' underwriters—Document in possession of underwriters' solicitor—Plaintiff retaining substantial interest in action—Stay of action till discovery made.—The plaintiffs, as owners of cargo, sued the defendants, as shipowners, for breach of a contract contained in a bill of lading. Underwriters, with whom the plaintiffs had effected a policy of insurance on the cargo to the extent of three-fourths of its value, paid on the policy, and then took over the conduct of the action. The defendants desired to have discovery of a document which was in the possession of the underwriters' solicitors, and applied for an order to stay the action until such discovery was given.

Held, that, as the plaintiffs were not mere nominal plaintiffs, but had a real and substantial interest in the action, the order could not be made.

12. Frivolous and vexatious applications—Interlocutory applications before judgment — Order to prevent.—Where repeated frivolous and vexatious interlocutory applications have been made in an action before judgment, the court will make an order prohibiting any further application without leave of the court.—KINNAIRD (LORD) v. FIELD (No. 1). C.A., 3; [1905] 2 Ch. 306; 74 L. 13. Judgment—Order that plaintiff do recover a sum of money—Four-day order—Enforcing order—R. S. C. 1883, ord. 42, r. 3; ord. 41, r. 5.—Judgment in an action for a breach of trust was given in the form that the plaintiff do recover a sum of money. The plaintiff subsequently obtained a four-day order for payment of this sum.

Held, on appeal, that the four-day order must be discharged, the court having, under the old common law practice as it existed before the Judicature Act, no jurisdiction to supplement an order for the recovery of a sum of money by a four-day order, while rule 3 of order 42 did not apply, as a four-day order was not a mode of enforcing the original order but was an addition or supplement to it.—ODDY, RE, MAJOR v. HARNESS. C.A., 291; [1906] 1 Ch. 93; 75 L. J. Ch. 141; 94 L. T. 146.

14. Order for examination of husband—Time for attendance not stated in order—Subsequent appointment by registrar—Disobedience—Attachment—Contempt of court—Ord. 41, r. 5.—The provision of ord. 41, r. 5—that every order requiring any person to do an act thereby ordered, shall state the time within which the act is to be done—is not sufficiently complied with if no time is stated in the order, but an appointment is subsequently made by the registrar and appears in an endorsement made on the order.

Where, therefore, an order made by the Divorce Division for the attendance of a husband before one of the registrars for the purpose of being examined as to his means contained the defect above referred to, it was held that a writ of attachment against him for contempt of court in failing to attend the appointment before the registrar was wrongly issued.

Decision of the President (Sir John Gorell Barnes) reversed.—TOWNEND v. TOWNEND, C.A.; 93 L. T. 680.

15. Originating summons—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 54a, rr. 1, 4 — Construction — Jurisdiction — Questions of fact.—An executor handed over securities to a legatee by a deed of 1897 upon terms which included a guarantee by the executor that until the 31st of December, 1903, the securities should be of a certain value. The legatee mortgaged his interest in the estate by a deed which did not mention the guarantee. The mortgagees, by a deed which recited the guarantee, sold the mortgaged property to L., who brought an action in the King's Bench Division against the executor claiming the alleged difference between the amount realized and the guaranteed value of the securities. By agreement the action was dropped and another action was brought in the Chancery Division. A deed was then executed by the mortgagees conveying all the premises comprised in the mortgage by way of confirmation to L. L. then discontinued his action and took out an originating summons asking for a declaration that, according to the true construction of the deeds, the benefit of the guarantee had been assigned to and vested in him, and for an account.

Held, that inasmuch as questions both of fact and of construction were involved, and a decision of the questions of construction would not, in whichever way they were decided, necessarily put an end to the litigation, an originating summons under order 54a was not the proper mode of procedure.—LEWIS v. GREEN, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 93; [1905] 2 Ch. 340; 74 L. J. Ch. 682; 93 L. T. 303.

16. Parties—Bankruptcy of plaintiff suing for himself and all other creditors—Abatement—Application to dismiss action—Action in representative capacity—Ord. 17, r. 1.—Where a receiving order followed by an adjudication in bankruptcy had been made against the plaintiff in an action in which the claim on behalf of himself and all other creditors was for an order setting aside an assignment of personal property by way of settlement made by the first defendant upon his wife, the second defendant, previously to his bankruptcy and the defendants applied for a stay of proceedings in the action:

Held, that the action must be dismissed unless the official receiver intervened within a specified time, on the ground that, although the action was brought on behalf of all the creditors, the plaintiff could only sue as a creditor, and that, when he ceased to be such by the assignment by operation of law to his trustee in bankruptcy, he ceased to be a person capable of continuing the action; that he was not a trustee of the right of action, but suing as a creditor in his own right; and that a receiving order and injunction obtained in the action did not operate in the same manner as a judgment in a creditor's administration action, where the court undertakes to protect all the creditors.—WOOLF v. VAN BOOLEN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 94 L. T. 502.

17. Payment into court—Liability not denied—Death of defendant before trial—Jurisdiction to order payment out of money—Ord. 22, rr. 1, 5.—The defendant in an action of libel without denying liability paid a sum of money into court as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff proceeded with the action and did not take the money out of court. Before trial the defendant died, and his executors applied for an order that the money in court should be paid out to them.

Held, that, though the action had abated owing to the death of the defendant, the court had power, under its general jurisdiction over money in court, to order it to be paid out as it thought right, and that the plaintiff's right was superior to the executors', and the court would order it to be paid out to him.—BROWN v. FEENEY, C.A., 445; [1905] 1 K. B. 563; 75 L. J. K. B. 494; 94 L. T. 460.

18. Pleading—Embarrassing endorsement of writ—Abuse of process of court—Striking out—Married woman—Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Costs—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2—Where a writ is embarrassing because the endorsements thereon state claims wilfully framed in a manner that cannot be supported, that are not made in good faith, and that are intentionally too general, it is the proper course to strike out the writ altogether with its endorsements, but with leave to issue a fresh writ in proper form.

A married woman, who is the real plaintiff in an action, may, when her action is dismissed with costs, be ordered, under section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), to pay costs, when taxed, out of property settled for her separate use without power of anticipation, but it is not necessary to appoint a receiver.—HUNTLY v. GASKELL, C.A., 164; [1905] 2 Ch. 656; 75 L. J. Ch. 66; 93 L. T. 785.

19. Service out of the jurisdiction—Contract to be performed within the jurisdiction—Breach within the jurisdiction — Contract of agency for England—Wrongful termination of agency—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (e).—By a contract made abroad the defendants, a foreign insurance company, appointed the plaintiffs, a firm carrying on business in London, to be their agents for the United Kingdom and certain other countries for a period of five years. Before the expiration of the term the plaintiffs received a letter from a representative of the defendants, written in London, putting an end to the agency. The plaintiffs obtained leave under ord. 11, r. 1 (e), to serve on the defendants out of the jurisdiction a writ of summons in an action for breach of the contract of agency.

Held, that the order for service out of the jurisdiction was rightly made; for the breach alleged by the plaintiffs was a breach within the jurisdiction of a contract to be performed by the defendants within the jurisdiction.—MUTZENBECHER v. LA ASEGURADORA ESPANOLA, C.A., 207; [1906] 1 K. B. 254; 75 L. J. K. B. 172; 94 L. T. 127.

20. Service out of jurisdiction—Substituted service of same writ within jurisdiction—Ord. 6, rr. 1, 2.—The plaintiffs obtained an order giving them leave to issue a concurrent writ and to serve the same out of the jurisdiction on the defendant, and also to serve the same by sending a copy thereof through the post addressed to the defendant at five different addresses, three of these addresses being in England and two in Belgium.

Held, that this order was regular within ord. 6, rr. 1, 2.—WESTERN SUBURBAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUCKLIDGE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 62; [1905] 2 Ch. 472; 74 L. J. Ch. 751; 93 L. T. 664.

21. Stay of proceedings—Parties resident in Scotland—Cause of action arising in Scotland—Vexatious and oppressive and abuse of process of court to bring action in England.—The plaintiff in an action to recover damages for misrepresentation was a person domiciled and resident in Scotland. The defendants were a bank incorporated in Scotland, the treasurer of the bank, who was domiciled and resident in Scotland, another person resident in Scotland, and a person resident in England. All the transactions which give rise to the alleged cause of action took place in Scotland, all the witnesses resided in Scotland, and all the documents relating to the matters in question were in Scotland. The defendant who resided in England was a merely nominal defendant, and did not enter an appearance to the action.

Held, that it was vexatious and oppressive and an abuse of the process of the court to bring the action in England rather than in Scotland, and that the action ought to be stayed.—LOGAN v. BANK OF SCOTLAND, C.A., 270; [1906] 1 K. B. 141; 75 L. J. K. B. 218; 94 L. T. 153.

The application to the High Court was made by motion in court.

Held, that the transfer would be made, but that the proper method of asking for a transfer from the county court to the High Court under section 6 of the County Court (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act, 1868, was by way of summons in chambers.—"INDRA," THE, P.D.; 94 L. T. 110.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT:—

1. Commission agent—Determination of agency—Notice—Custom requiring notice.—The defendants, who carried on business in the glove trade, made an agreement with the plaintiff, a commission agent, in these terms: "We will give the 2½ per cent. commission on all business you do for us in London. You let us know to whom you show our samples, and, if business results from the transaction, we will forward your commission quarterly. This refers to orders executed."

The defendants terminated this agreement without giving any notice, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover damages. At the trial the plaintiff tendered evidence of a custom in the glove trade that six months' notice must be given to terminate the agency of a commission agent. The judge rejected that evidence, and directed a verdict and judgment for the defendants.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that evidence of the alleged custom, being inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement, was not admissible, and that the defendants were entitled to terminate the agency without notice.—JOYNSON v. HUNT, C.A.; 93 L. T. 470.

2. Husband and wife—Goods supplied for household on order of wife—Judgment against wife for part of price—Alternative liability of husband—Election—Right to sue husband for balance.—An action was brought against a husband and wife, who were living together, for the balance of an account for groceries supplied by the plaintiff to the defendants upon the order of the wife. Upon an application for judgment under order 14 against both defendants, the husband denied all liability, while the wife admitted indebtedness for the greater part of the claim, and in view of this admission by the wife the master gave judgment against the wife for a part of the sum claimed, with leave to her to defend as to the balance and with leave to the husband to defend the action.

Afterwards a jury found that there was not joint liability of husband and wife, and that the plaintiff had given credit to the husband only.

Judgment having been given against the husband for the balance of the amount,

Held (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J.; Jelf, J., dissenting), that the taking of the judgment against the wife for part of the claim was not such an election by the plaintiff to accept the liability of the wife for the whole amount as prevented the plaintiff from afterwards proceeding against the husband for the rest of the claim, when it was found that he was originally solely liable.

3. Money borrowed by agent on behalf of principal without authority—Application of money in discharge of principal's legal liabilities—Right of lender to recover from principal.—An agent of the defendant firm borrowed money from the plaintiff on behalf of the firm, but without having any authority from them so to do, and applied the money so borrowed in discharging legal liabilities of the firm.

Held, that, by virtue of the equitable principle stated by Lord Selborne, L.C., in Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks, & Co., 31 W. R. 98, 22 Ch. D. 61, the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants the money so borrowed and so applied.—BANNATYNE v. MACIVER, C.A., 293; [1906] 1 K. B. 103; 75 L. J. K. B. 120; 94 L. T. 150.

4. Undisclosed principal — Baptist minister — Appointed to the pastorate by a document signed by the deacons of the chapel—Fund insufficient to pay salary —Claim against deacons to make good deficiency.—Held, that the defendants were not personally liable as agents for an undisclosed principal to make up arrears of salary due to the plaintiff, although they had invited him to become pastor of the Baptist chapel of which they were the deacons, and had signed the document under which he became pastor, because there was evidence on the face of the document that the salary of the pastor was to be payable out of the chapel fund, of which fund the plaintiff himself was treasurer, and from which he had paid himself salary as it became due, so long as the fund was sufficient to meet it.—MORLEY v. MAKIN, K.B.D., 395.

PRIVY COUNCIL:—

Jurisdiction—Act of executive Government of a colony—Proclamation of martial law—Conviction by a court-martial.—The Judicial Committee will not interfere with an act of the executive government of a colony in a case in which no application has been made to the courts of justice in the colony to interpose in the matter.—MGOMINI, EX PARTE, P.C.; 94 L. T. 558.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration—Bankruptcy—Grant to official receiver—Dispensing with sureties—Practice.—Where a grant of letters of administration to the estate of a deceased person is made to an official receiver in bankruptcy, the Probate Court will dispense with sureties to the administration bond under the special circumstances of the case, since the official receiver has, as an official of the Board of Trade, already given security for the due performance of his duties.—CAUSTON, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D.; [1906] P. 124; 75 L. J. P. 42; 94 L. T. 613.

2. Administration—Probate Act, 1857, s. 73—Divorce.—The Court allowed a person entitled to administration in priority to the applicant to be passed over without citing him, it being (taken as) proved that his claim to administration was put an end to by a valid decree of divorce.—WALLAS, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D., 172; [1905] P. 326; 75 L. J. P. 8; 94 L. T. 102.

3. Administration pendente lite—Concurrent suits —Chancery and probate actions—Creditors—Sureties. —An action was commenced by creditors in the Chancery Division for the administration of the estate of a deceased person. In the Probate Division an action was instituted by the executors of a later will of the same deceased person to establish it against the executors of an earlier will. An order had been obtained by the creditors in the Chancery proceedings for the appointment of the plaintiffs in the probate proceedings as receivers of the estate. The court granted administration pendente lite in the proceedings in the Probate Division to the same persons who had been appointed on the application of the creditors in the Chancery proceedings, although they were in no wise parties to the probate proceedings. The same sureties as had been accepted by the Chancery Division were approved by the Probate Division.

4. Mutual will—Fresh will.—A husband and wife entered into an "arrangement" to make wills in each other's favour, and did so. The wife predeceased her husband, and at her death it was found that she had, since the making of the will, made other wills unknown to her husband, which reduced the gifts originally made to him.

The Court held that the mutual will had not become irrevocable by death, for the testatrix had not stood by it, but had executed a later will, and the husband was not prejudiced, for he had notice from the death.—STONE v. HOSKINS, P.D.; 64 [1905] P. 194; 74 L. J. P. 110; 93 L. T. 441.

PUBLIC HEALTH:—

1. Agreement with local authority—Reservation of powers—Liability of frontagers—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57).—Under an agreement made in 1879 between a railway company, certain property owners, and the local authority, it was agreed that a road should be dedicated to the public and taken over by the local authority as a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, but that the local authority should retain the same powers of requiring the respective owners and occupiers for the time being of land fronting, adjoining, or abutting on the road to sewer and make up, &c., all or such parts of the road, carriage-way, or footway as were not already sewered and made up, and their rights under the Public Health Act, 1875, and a local Act were also reserved to the local authority.

At the date of the agreement the road was properly made up, but the footway was not paved. The local authority having decided, under the powers conferred by the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to pave the footway, they served notices of apportionment on the frontagers.

Held, that the frontagers were not liable, as the road was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and the powers which the local authority attempted to enforce did not apply to such a highway, and the local authority could not, under the agreement, make the frontagers liable.—FOLKESTONE CORPORATION v. MARSH, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 511.

2. Bye-law — Existing water-closets — Repairs — Notice not given to authority—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 39.—By a bye-law made in pursuance of section 39 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891: "Every person who shall intend to construct any water-closet . . . or to fit or fix in or in connection with any water-closet . . . any apparatus or any trap or soil pipe, shall, before executing any such works, give notice in writing to the clerk of the sanitary authority."

Held, that this bye-law applied to a water-closet constructed before the making of the bye-law.—LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY v. HILLS, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 512; 75 L. J. K. B. 340; 94 L. T. 517.

3. Sewer—"Single private drain"—Single private drain running into sewer—Liability to abate nuisance in sewer—Notice of nuisance by inspector of local authority—Sufficiency—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) s 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—The respondent was the owner of six houses in a row of sixteen houses, the other houses belonging to different owners. All the houses in the row were drained in pairs, each pair being drained by a separate pipe into a pipe common to both houses, and each of such common pipes discharged into a line of pipes (called the alleged single private drain) laid in private ground behind the row of houses and parallel thereto, and the drainage of all the houses was thence conveyed to a public sewer. The drainage of the respondent's houses was conveyed (as in the case of all the houses) to the alleged single private drain, first by pipes which were not common, and then by pipes which were common, to each pair. Several of the other houses belonging to different owners, being at the upper end of the row of houses, were also drained into the alleged single private drain before it received the drainage of the respondent's houses. It was admitted that the pipes which were common to each pair of the respondent's houses were "sewers" within the meaning of the Public Health Acts. A nuisance existed in the alleged single private drain behind the respondent's houses, and the question was whether the respondent was liable to bear the cost of abating the same.

Held, that, inasmuch as the portion of the alleged single private drain behind the respondent's houses would, if it had received only the drainage of the respondent's houses, have been a sewer, to which section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, would not have applied, it was not brought within the operation of section 19, and did not become a single private drain, to which that section was applicable, because in addition it also received the drainage of several of the other houses belonging to different owners, and that therefore the respondent was not liable to pay for abating the nuisance. — WOOD GREEN URBAN COUNCIL v. JOSEPH, K.B.D.; 74 L. RAILWAY:—

1. Amalgamation of undertaking—Water supply— Ultrà vires—North-Eastern Railway (Hull Docks) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. cxcviii.).—A railway company, its undertaking having been amalgamated with that of a dock company, supplied water to a dock, formerly the property of the dock company, from land acquired by the railway company in respect of its railway undertaking. The amalgamating Act provided that none of the powers relating exclusively to the dock company should apply to any part of the amalgamated undertaking other than the docks, and that none of the powers relating exclusively to the railway company should apply to the dock or to the company in respect thereof.

Held, that the company's action in so supplying water was intrà vires.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., Ch.D. Joyce. J., 212; [1906] 1 Ch. 310; 75 L. J. Ch. 166; 94 L. T. 13.

2. Carriage of goods—Special contract—Liability of company—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 7.—Section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, applies to goods carried by passenger train which in fact the railway company are not bound to carry by passenger train.

A railway company, therefore, having carried travellers' samples by passenger train, which they were under no obligation to do, under the condition that they were relieved from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, or delay, such condition was held not to be binding owing to such special contract not having been signed as provided in section 7.—WILKINSON v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 820.

3. Compensation for leaving coal unworked under railway—Basis of compensation—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.—Where the lessee of coal mines lying under or adjacent to a line of railway is desirous of working such mines, and the railway company has, under section 78 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, notified him that they are willing to pay him compensation for not working such mines,

Held, that the measure of compensation payable by the railway company was the profit which would have been made on the reserved coal, and not the loss which the owner or lessee might suffer by reason of the interference of the railway company with the working of the mine.—JOICEY & CO. v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 332; [1906] 1 K. B. 195; 75 L. J. K. B. 57; 94 L. T. 143.

4. Injury to passenger by spark from engine—Negligence.—Exit from station—Omission to take reasonable precautions to protect from sparks—Obligation of railway company.—The plaintiff, a passenger, while leaving the defendants' station by a path belonging to the defendants which ran alongside the railway and was an authorized means of exit, was injured by a spark from an engine on the railway. There was evidence that the attention of the defendants had been called to the danger of injury from sparks to passengers using the path, and that they had declined to protect the path by a screen or cover on the ground of expense; and that the path could have been protected at a reasonable cost and without interfering with the business of the railway. The engine was properly constructed to prevent the emission of sparks according to the latest and most improved methods, and there was no negligence in working the engine.

In an action for damages for negligence, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that there was evidence upon which the jury could properly find that the defendants were negligent in not taking reasonable precautions to protect passengers using the path from injury by sparks.—ATHERTON v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY, C.A.; 93 L. T. 464.

5. Land acquired for statutory purposes—Power to dedicate to the public.—A statutory body, such as a railway company, cannot alienate its rights in land (other than superfluous land) acquired for a statutory purpose, if such alienation may in the future prove incompatible with the use of the land for carrying out the company's statutory objects.

A railway company built and maintained a private accommodation bridge over its lines to connect the properties of a landowner that had been severed by the railway.

The bridge in course of time came to be much used by the public, and the acts done in connection with it by the railway company would, if they had been the acts of a private owner, have constituted a dedication of the roadway to the public.

Gas pipes were laid by the local authority in the roadway of the bridge on the footing that the bridge was a public road, and in exercise of the powers conferred by section 6 of the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 15).

The railway company wished to alter the bridge, in order to lay down more lines on land acquired for that purpose, and adjacent to their existing lines at the bridge, and requested the local authority to remove the gas pipes.

Held, that the bridge in question was not a public road so as to enable the local authority to exercise therein the powers conferred by the above-mentioned section.

Held, also, that this decision in the absence of the Attorney-General did not bind the public.

A mandatory injunction compelling the local authority to remove their gas pipes was refused on the ground that the local authority might be entitled to retain them by virtue of section 7 of the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847.

6. Omnibus — Omnibus business — Passengers — Incidental powers—Ultrà vires.—Railway companies, unless specially authorized to do so, have no power to carry on business as omnibus proprietors for the purpose of distributing and collecting their passengers. Such a business is not incidental to their undertaking.

7. Private Act—Stipulations for the protection of a landowner—Contract with another person contrary to stipulation—Refusal of landowner to waive stipulation—Contract ultrà vires—Specific performance—Damages.—A private Act of Parliament granting certain powers to a railway company contained a section "for the protection of Sir H. B.," a local landowner, "his heirs and assigns." It was provided inter alia in this section that the company should maintain a station in a certain place "for both passengers and goods, with all proper and sufficient works and accommodation and access to and from the estate of the owner." Neither the owner nor his successors in title had waived these provisions, but the railway company, overlooking them, entered into a contract with C. to remove the station and build another nearer land belonging to C.

The company having refused to fulfil their contract, C. brought an action against them for specific performance or damages. The company in their defence submitted that the contract was ultrà vires on their part, and therefore absolutely void.

Held (Romer, L.J., dissenting), that the section was a statutory enactment and it was not competent to the company to take the land and then do that which the statute prohibited; and the fact that the prohibition was not in the interest of the general public, but for the protection of a private owner made no difference; and therefore the agreement with the plaintiff was ultrà vires, and he was not entitled to an order either for specific performance of the agreement or damages.

8. Rates—Inequality of charge—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 90.—Money paid to agent under mistake of fact—When recoverable back.—The plaintiff contracted with the Metropolitan Railway Co. for the carriage of coke breeze from a station on the Metropolitan Railway to a station on the defendants' railway, at a certain specified through rate per ton. The goods having been delivered, the plaintiff paid for the carriage at the agreed rate to the defendants as the collecting agents of the Metropolitan Railway Co. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that the Metropolitan Railway Co. had in their published book of rates a through rate between the same stations charging a less sum per ton for coke breeze if used for fuel purposes. The coke breeze carried for the plaintiff was intended to be used for other than fuel purposes. The plaintiff sought to recover from the defendants the difference between the two rates, upon the ground that differential charges for the carriage of the same article according to the purposes for which it was used was a breach of the provisions of section 90 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, which requires "that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons and after the same rate . . . in respect of all . . . goods . . . of the same description conveyed . . . over the same portion of the line of railway under the same circumstances. There was no evidence that the Metropolitan Railway Co. had in fact ever carried coke breeze for fuel purposes at the lower rate for any particular persons, but the lower rate had been in existence as a published rate for several years, including the whole period covered by the transactions with the plaintiff. The payments by the plaintiff to the defendants had been made voluntarily and without compulsion. Before any notice to the defendants of any claim by the plaintiff that he had been overcharged they had settled in account with the Metropolitan Co. in in respect of the payments so received by them on the Metropolitan Co.'s behalf.

Held, (1) that, assuming section 90 to apply to the case of carriage at a through rate over more than one railway, as to which the court expressed no opinion, it was necessary, in order to establish an inequality of rates under that section, to show that some persons had in fact been charged at the lower rate, and of that the existence of the lower rate upon the rate book was no evidence.

(2) That, even if there was a breach of that section, the money could not be recovered back from the defendants, who had received it as innocent agents and settled for it with their principals before any notice of the overcharge; and that this applied equally to that portion of the money received by them, which, in the ordinary course under their traffic arrangement with the Metropolitan Co., they would be entitled to retain to their own use as representing their share of the through rate for the portion of the transit over their railway, the money having been paid by the plaintiff as a lump payment under a contract to which the defendants were not parties.—TAYLOR v. METROPOLITAN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 55.

9. Rating—Poor rate—Assessing portion of line in parish—Principle of assessment—Parochial method—Contributive value—Cost of construction of line—Case stated by quarter sessions—Omission in order as to statement of case.—A line of railway was to be constructed by a railway company under the powers of an Act passed in 1845, and for the purpose of that construction the company, who were to construct the line, were to receive from another company incorporated under the Act a certain sum, which was the estimated expense of making the line, and were to pay 4 per cent. interest on that sum as a "rent" to the company which advanced the capital. That sum having all been spent, and having proved insufficient to complete the line, the company spent a further and larger sum in completing the line, and the line became vested in the appellants. There were three competing railway companies connecting with the line, but it was proved that none of these companies would pay any higher sum by way of rent than was represented by the parochial method, nor would they work the on a fixed proportion of gross earnings. In rating to poor rate a portion of this line that passed through a certain parish, Held, that the rateable value of the portion of the line within the parish ought to be ascertained upon the parochial principle—that is, by taking the profits resulting from the receipts and expenses in that particular parish and making the usual allowances and deductions therefrom, and that neither the contributive value accruing from the occupation of the line in that parish in securing traffic and earning profits on other parts of the system, nor the original cost of the construction of the line ought to be taken into consideration.

Where a court of quarter sessions consent to state a case for the opinion of the High Court the order of the quarter sessions sent up with the case to the High Court ought to state the fact that a case has been stated by them, to give the High Court jurisdiction.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY v. AMPTHILL UNION, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 314.

10. Rating—Railway lines—Rating of lines passing through station—Lines to goods station—Relief lines or waiting station where through traffic is detained—Signals and signal boxes—Principle of rating—Lines directly and indirectly productive.—A difference arose and an arbitration took place with regard to the rating of certain lines of the Great Northern Railway Co., which passed from end to end through the parish of Hornsey, as to which of these lines should be regarded as directly productive and which as indirectly productive and rateable locally in the parish. The difference arose as to (1) certain lines which ran to the goods stations in the parish, and which constituted the only approach to the goods stations, warehouses, and goods yards, and as to which the arbitrator found as a fact that they were used entirely or primarily for the delivery of goods inwards to Hornsey from places outside, and for the taking of goods outwards from Hornsey—that is, to carry traffic into and from the goods stations; (2) as to certain other lines where through traffic was detained on its journey from places north of Hornsey to London and places south of Hornsey, not from local circumstances arising in Hornsey, but by reason of the proximity of the station to London and of the large passenger traffic there, in consequence of which the trains were kept on those lines at a standstill, not for purposes of sorting, marshalling, &c., but merely in waiting until the lines south should be cleared and opened to receive them, and on some of these lines some shunting was done; and (3) as to certain signals and signal boxes, which the arbitrator held to be indirectly productive, in acccordance with the ruling in Midland Railway Co. v. Pontefract Union, 84 L. T. Rep. 536, [1901] 2 K. B. 189, and as to these no further judgment was given.

Held, by Channell, J., (1) that, as to the lines into the goods stations, the finding of the arbitrator ought to be affirmed upon this part of the case; and (2) that, as to the "relief" or waiting lines, the arbitrator was right in treating as indirectly productive that portion of those lines which would be required if only shunting and sorting and no waiting were done upon them.—GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY AND EDMONTON UNION, RE, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 479.

11. Rating—Short distance—Merchandize "conveyed" by the company partly on its own railway and partly on another railway.—By clause 11 of the schedule to the London and North-Western Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. ccxxi.), where merchandize is conveyed for an entire distance which does not exceed a certain specified distance (varying according as station terminals are chargeable at one end or at both ends of the transit, or at neither), the company may make the charges for conveyance authorized by the schedule as for the specified distance: "Provided that where merchandize is conveyed by the company partly on the railway and partly on the railway of any other company, the railway and the railway of such other company shall for the purpose of reckoning such short distance be considered as one railway.

Held, that the expression "conveyed" in the proviso refers, not to the contract of carriage, but to the physical haulage, and that if during the portion of the transit which takes place on the railway of the other company the goods are hauled by the engines of that other company, the proviso does not apply, notwithstanding that the goods were delivered to the London and North-Western Railway Co. to be carried to their destination at a through rate.—LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE COAL ASSOCIATION v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. AND LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 577; 75 L. J. K. B. 454.

12. Smoke—Company's default—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 114—Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 19.—Section 114 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, provides: "Every locomotive steam engine to be used on the railway shall, if it use coal or other similar fuel emitting smoke, be constructed on the principle of consuming and so as to consume its own smoke; and if any engine be not so constructed the company or party using such engine shall forfeit five pounds for every day during which such engine shall be used on the railway."

Section 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, provides: "Where proceedings are taken against a company using a locomotive steam engine on a railway on account of the same not consuming its own smoke, then, if it appears to the justices before whom the complaint is heard that the engine is constructed on the principle of consuming its own smoke, but that it failed to consume its own smoke, as far as practicable, at the time charged in the complaint through the default of the company or of any servant in the employment of the company, such company shall be deemed guilty of an offence under the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 114."

Held, that it was not a default on behalf of the company merely because the company did not supply the coal which was the best that could be obtained regarded from the point of view of its smokelessness.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY, K.B.D., 537; [1906] 2 K. RATING:—

1. County rate—Appeal to "next quarter sessions after such cause of appeal shall have arisen"—Alteration of basis—Retrospective alteration—County Rate Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 81), ss. 17, 22.—The parish of M., in the West Riding of the county of Y., comprised certain property of the G. N. Railway Co. In July, 1904, the county council revised the county rate basis, and by such basis so revised the total assessable value for the county rate for the parish of M. was fixed at £13,419, and the property of the railway company was fixed, both in the basis and valuation list, at £3,100. In October, 1904, the county council made a half-yearly poor rate, and in January, 1905, the railway company successfully appealed to quarter sessions on the ground that their assessment to the poor rate in respect of their property in the parish of M. was at too high a figure. Thereupon the M. parish council appealed to quarter sessions against the county rate basis, and also against the county rate made upon that basis. The appeal was not to the next quarter sessions after the rate had been made, nor to the next quarter sessions after the result of the G. N. Railway Co.'s appeal, but was to the next quarter sessions—namely, those held in June, 1905—after the result of the appeal became known to the parish council. The quarter sessions allowed the appeal against the basis, and ordered the reduction to take effect for the whole period covered by the rate of October, 1904.

Held, that, so far as the appeal was against the county rate, the parish council were out of time as they had not appealed to the "next quarter sessions after such cause of appeal shall have arisen" within section 22 of the County Rates Act, 1852.

Held, also, that under that statute the quarter sessions had no power to order a retrospective alteration of the county rate basis.—WEST RIDING COUNTY COUNCIL v. MIDDLETON, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 157; 75 L. J. K. B. 485; 94 L. T. 785.

2. Exemption—Statutory exemption "from the payment of all and all manner of rates and assessments"—Liability for rate imposed by subsequent statute.—In a case in which the Crown had assumed a statutory liability for the payment of a commutation in lieu of rates upon property in the City of London in the hands of the Crown, and the statute provided that such property "shall be and shall be deemed and considered to be to all intents and purposes free and exempt from the payment of all and all manner of rates and assessments, although the same . . . may become private property by the sale or assignment thereof to individuals, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the property, after it had passed into private hands, was exempt from a "consolidated rate" imposed by a subsequent statute.

3. Occupation—Docks—Harbour—Statutory power to levy harbour dues—Dues connected with occupation of land—Swansea Harbour Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. cxxvi.), ss. 125, 126, 127.—The Swansea Harbour Trustees were appointed and incorporated by a private Act of Parliament as conservators of the harbour and river at Swansea within certain defined limits.

Besides piers and other works which the trustees had constructed on lands purchased by them within the limits of the harbour, they had also constructed under their statutory powers a floating dock and basin which occupied part of what had been the bed of the river.

The soil of the harbour and river underneath this floating dock and basin was not purchased by the trustees, but remained, as it had always been, the property of the lord of the manor.

By various private Acts the trustees were authorized to take certain dues in respect of ships using the harbour.

Held, by the Divisional Court, (1) that the trustees were in rateable occupation of the floating dock and basin, and (2) that the harbour dues were to be taken into consideration in estimating the rateable value of the lands within the harbour limits in occupation of the trustees.

Upon an appeal by the trustees against the latter part of the judgment of the Divisional Court, Held, reversing the decision of the Divisional Court, that the harbour dues were not so connected with the occupation of land by the trustees that they should be taken into consideration in estimating the rateable value of the lands.

Reg. v. Hull Dock Co., 7 Q. B. 2, establishes no general principle of law, but depends entirely on an inference of fact drawn by the court.—SWANSEA HARBOUR v. SWANSEA UNION, C.A.; 94 L. T. 627.

4. Poor law—Railway—Rateable value—Interest on cost of construction — Competitive value. — The appellants (the Great Central Railway Co.) constructed a railway about eight miles in length connecting their line with the Great Western Railway Co. in pursuance of an arrangement entered into with that company. The cost of constructing the line was £280,000, and that sum was advanced to the appellants by the Great Western Railway Co. at 3 per cent. interest per annum. There were no stations or sidings on the line, nor does the line itself originate any traffic. The whole traffic on the line consists of through traffic passing from the appellants' line to that of the Great Western Railway Co., and it was admitted that persons other than the two above-mentioned railway companies could not be found to acquire the line.

Held, that, in ascertaining the rateable value, interest on the cost of construction was not an element which could be taken into account.—GREAT CENTRAL RAILWAY v. BANBURY UNION, K.B.D., 470; [1906] 1 K. B. 597; 75 L. J. K. B. 165; 94 L. T. 310.

5. Poor rate—Buildings with machinery not part of the freehold—Tenant's machinery.—Buildings occupied as engineering works contained machines which formed no part of the freehold, but were placed there for the purpose of making, and did in fact make, the buildings fit for the purpose for which they were used. The machines were not affixed to the freehold, and were admitted to be "tenant's machinery."

On an appeal to quarter sessions by the tenant against a poor rate the court held that the correct basis of assessment was to ascertain what was the rent which a hypothetical tenant would give for the works as a combination of land, buildings, and machinery, on a demise, which included the machinery, so that he would get, as part of the consideration for the rent the right to use the machines upon the premises during his tenancy, and that on that footing the machines would be properly taken into account as enhancing the rental and the rateable value of the buildings.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that this was the correct basis of assessment.—KIRBY v. HUNSLET UNION, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 43; 75 L. J. K. B. 129; 94 L. T. 36.

6. Poor rate—Demand of whole rate—Occupier going out of possession during currency of rate—Apportionment of rate—Necessity of fresh demand for apportioned part — Jurisdiction to issue distress warrant without fresh demand.—Where the whole poor rate at which the rated occupier of premises is assessed has been duly demanded from him and not paid, and he subsequently goes out of possession of the premises during the period for which the rate is made, and thereby becomes entitled to an apportionment of the rate, a fresh demand for his proportion of the rate is not necessary, but, upon a summons for payment of the rate, the justices have jurisdiction to apportion the rate and ascertain the amount for which the occupier is liable, and to issue a distress warrant for that amount, notwithstanding that there has been no fresh demand for the precise amount of the rate so found to be due.—MANSEL v. ITCHEN OVERSEERS, K.B.D., 456; [1906] 1 K. B. 221; 75 L. J. K. B. 232; 94 L. T. 320.

7. Poor rate—Exemption—Society instituted for the purposes of fine arts exclusively—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—The appellants were an institution established for the purposes of the fine arts and of encouraging, advancing, and disseminating the same exclusively. The expenses of maintenance were defrayed by fees paid by the students and grants from the Middlesex County Council and the Board of Education, and a certificate had been given by the Registrar of Friendly Societies that the institution was entitled to the benefit of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36.

Held, that the institution was exempt from poor rates under section 1 of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843.—HORNSEY SCHOOL OF ART v. EDMONTON UNION, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 203.

8. Poor rate—Rateable value—Deduction—Expense necessary to maintain premises in a state to command rent—Parochial Assessment Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1.—An expense to be allowed as a deduction under the Parochial Assessment Act, 1836, in arriving at the rateable value of a hereditament must be one which is necessary to maintain that particular hereditament in a state to command the rent at which it might reasonably be expected to let from year to year to a hypothetical tenant.—NEWPORT UNION v. STEAD, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 147; 75 L. J. K. B. 586.

9. Poor rate — Water main — Occupation. — The appellants, who were the owners of a reservoir and of an aqueduct, were empowered by statutory powers to supply water to any sanitary authority within twenty miles of the aqueduct, and to execute works necessary for such supply.

By agreement with the W. Urban District Council, the council took the steps necessary under the Public Health Act, 1875, to enable the work to be done, and the appellants laid a main from their aqueduct to supply the council with water, and under the agreement the main was to remain the property of the appellants, and they retained the entire management and control of the same, and the water was measured by a meter where the water entered the pipes of the council.

Held, that the appellants were liable to be rated as the occupiers of the main.—LIVERPOOL CORPORATION v. BIRKENHEAD UNION, K.B.D.; 94 L.T. 509.

10. Rector's rates—Metropolis—"House"—12 Car. 2, c. 37—51 Geo. 3, c. 150.—By the 51 Geo. 3, c. 150, the houses of the parish of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, were charged with a certain rate.

Held, that a house which by internal alterations had been made into a warehouse, and was still capable of reconversion into an ordinary dwelling-house, though not actually used as such at the present time, was liable to be charged under the above Act.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (53 W. R. 406, [1905] 1 K. B. 669), reversed.

11. Sewerage board—Value of sewage farm as means of discharging statutory duties.—A sewerage board let a sewage farm to a tenant at a fair rent including an additional sum for the manurial value of the sewage.

Held, that the sum paid by the tenant was the true basis of assessment, and the rating authority was not entitled to take into account in their assessment the annual value of the advantages and facilities accruing to the sewerage board by the user of the farm for the performance of their statutory duties. — DAVIES v. SEISDON UNION, K.B.D., 455; [1906] 1 K. 12. Special exemption—Education rate—Liability to pay.—In 1894 an urban district with certain portions of a rural district was created by charter a municipal borough. By a scheme made in the same year under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, it was provided that the portions of harbour property which were situated in the rural district "shall not in the future pay to the borough, or be assessable for any rates or charges (not being the water rate hereinafter mentioned) at a higher rate of assessment in the pound than at present—that is to say, 3d. in the pound per annum (exclusive of the rate for the relief of the poor and the other charges at present collected with the poor rate within the urban district)—so long as the said harbour shall out of its own revenues pay, as at present, for its own lighting, cleansing, and repairing of public roads, ways, and places in the said harbour." Before the grant of the charter the harbour property in the rural district contributed through the poor rate to the expenses of the school attendance committee, and since the charter they continued to be assessed to rates for the relief of the poor, but the amount claimed for the poor rate did not include anything for expenses incurred in respect of elementary education in the borough.

Held, that these portions of the harbour property were not exempt from paying a rate for the expenses of the Education Act, 1902, levied by the corporation of Whitehaven as local education authority, although such rate was 5d. in the pound.—WHITEHAVEN HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS v. WHITEHAVEN UNION, K.B.D.; 94 L. RECEIVER:—

Practice—Equitable execution—Judgment debtor a foreigner resident abroad—Debts due to judgment debtor within jurisdiction—Special circumstances—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 45, r. 1; Appendix B., Form 25—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 8.—The plaintiff recovered judgment for a sum of money against the defendants, who were a foreign company incorporated and resident abroad. The plaintiff applied for a receiving order of the debts due and accruing due to the defendants by customers in England, whose names were set out in an affidavit made by the plaintiff. In that affidavit the plaintiff stated that the defendants had no place of business in this country, and no assets or property here which could be taken by any ordinary process of execution; that the only assets here were the debts due or becoming due to them from their customers in this country; and that he was informed by some of the customers that the defendants had, since the judgment, taken steps to obtain payment of their debts, and that he believed that the defendants intended to collect all the moneys due to them in England and thus to defeat the judgment. The plaintiff stated that he could not apply for a garnishee order to attach the debts due to the defendants, because he did not know which customers owed money nor the amount of their debts, if any.

Held, that there were special circumstances in the case which enabled the court to appoint a receiver. — GOLDSCHMIDT v. OBERRHEINISCHE METALLWERKE, C.A., 255; [1906] 1 K. B. 373; 75 L. J. K. B. 300; 94 L. T. 303.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE:—

Infancy—Agreement not to carry on business of employer—Restriction as to time—Space—Overlapping circles — Severance of agreement — Reasonableness—Injunction.—An agreement by an infant to enter the employment of a firm as clerk, renewed after his coming of age at increased wages as traveller, he being employed in the B. District, is not void as regards the restriction as to time by containing a stipulation that he will not during a period of fourteen years after the termination of his employment with the firm "at any place within a radius of thirty miles from either the town-hall at B. or the bar-gate at S."—points about thirty miles distant from each other so that the circles overlapped—carry on any business of a like character to that carried on by the firm. Such an agreement is severable as regards the specified trades the carying on of which by the defendant is restrained, and the limit of fourteen years is not excessive, but the agreement is not severable as regards the area sought to be covered, which, being one and indivisible, will be held to be wider than necessary for the plaintiff's protection.—HOOPER v. WILLIS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 93 L. T. 236.

RIVER:—

1. Diversion of water — Diminishing the flow of water — Unreasonable use of water — Pollution of stream—Rights of riparian owners.—The owner and occupiers of lands abutting on a natural stream complained that the occupiers of dye works immediately above their lands were diverting the water so as substantially to diminish the flow of water, and were also polluting the stream, and brought an action to restrain them.

The defendants claimed a right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of their works, and denied that they were substantially diminishing the flow of water or polluting the stream except occasionally and accidently.

Held, on the evidence, that the defendants were dealing unreasonably with the water of the stream, so as visibly and materially to diminish the quantity of water coming down and also polluting the water; and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to succeed, even without proof of actual damage, on the general principles of law as to the rights of riparian owners laid down in Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 590, 3 C. B. N. S. 596, and Wood v. Waud, 3 Ex. 748.—SHARP v. WILSON, ROTHERAY, & Co., Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 93 L. T. 155.

2. Riparian proprietor — Mill-dam — Right to abstract water.—A Crown Charter granting a mill with such dams, rights, and other privileges as appertained to it held not to support a claim to abstract all the water in the river for the use of the mill to the injury of other riparian proprietors, but only to justify the abstraction of an amount of water to which the claimants could show a prescriptive right.

Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East 208, 8 R. R. 466, approved.

Judgment of the court below reversed.

Semble, that the right claimed by the respondents to the exclusive use of all the water of a river cannot exist in law.

Held, further, that the rights of the parties were not affected by the fact that the dam of the respondents' mill was in fact formed by a natural obstruction in the river which had been artificially heightened.—WHITE & SONS v. WHITE, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 72; 75 L. J. P. C. 14; 94 L. T. 65.

3. Riparian proprietors—Right to water—Legitimate purposes—Percolation—Prescription Act—Right of way.—A riparian proprietor abstracted water from a stream by pipes and syphons to supply his fish ponds, and thereby interfered with the flow of water to the lower riparian proprietor's mill.

The higher riparian proprietor made a claim that, prior to his use of the pipes and syphons to convey water from the stream to his fish ponds, he had obtained the same amount of water by percolation through the banks of the stream, and therefore he had a right to such water under the Prescription Act.

The lower riparian proprietor claimed a right of way by prescription to repair the bank of the stream where it ran through the higher riparian proprietor's property. The gate by which he entered the higher riparian proprietor's property had always been kept locked and the key kept by the higher riparian proprietor or his servants; but this key had always been asked for as a matter of right when it was required, and had never been refused.

Held, the lower riparian proprietor had such a right as mentioned in Beeston v. Weate, 5 El. & Bl. 986, to keep the bank in repair on the higher riparian proprietor's property, and for that purpose to have access to his premises. Such a right was from time immemorial, and the fact of the gate being kept locked did not affect such right.

Held, also, the higher riparian proprietor could not justify abstracting water by pipes and syphons on the ground that if the bank had not been made watertight he would have been entitled to the same amount of water by percolation. Such a claim was not sustainable under the Prescription Act as a watercourse or otherwise.

Held, an injunction must be granted to restrain the abstraction of water from the stream by such pipes and syphons, and that they must be taken up and removed; but the order must state that a riparian proprietor was not entitled to restrain absolutely another riparian proprietor from taking any water from the stream for legitimate purposes. —ROBERTS v. FELLOWES, *Ch.D. SATISFACTION:—

Covenant—Will—Gift of residue—Covenant to settle after-acquired property.—A testator, on the marriage of his daughter M., settled £4,000 upon her, and covenanted on the death of the survivor of himself and his wife to pay to the trustees of the settlement such a sum as, with the sum then settled, would make up £10,000. M. covenanted to settle after-acquired property. The testator made a will in 1905 in which he directed his daughter M. to bring into hotchpot a sum of £3,000 he had advanced to her, and left his residue, amounting to £80,000, to be divided between his son C., his daughter M., and another daughter.

£5,539 14s. 5d. was required to make M.'s fortune up to £10,000. The question was whether the gift of residue satisfied the covenant. Under the settlement the ultimate trust, failing issue of the marriage, was for the testator. The ultimate trust of the property settled under the covenant to settle after-acquired property was, failing issue of the marriage, the next-of-kin of M. as if she had died unmarried.

Held, that, so far as M.'s life estate was concerned, the bequest of residue was a satisfaction of the covenant. But as the other cestuis que trust were not mentioned in the will and took no interest under it, there was no satisfaction in their case.—BLUNDELL, RE, BLUNDELL v. BLUNDELL, *Ch.D. 2. Heritage—Right in security—Messenger-at-arms —Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), ss. 8, 10—Scottish law.—By the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, s. 8, any creditor who has exposed for sale under his security the lands held in security . . . may apply to the sheriff for decree in the terms of Schedule D thereto annexed, and the sheriff may "after service on the proprietor and on the other creditors, if any, and after such intimation and inquiry as he may think fit, grant such application and issue decree in the said terms. On such decree being pronounced and an extract thereof in which the said lands shall be described at length or by reference recorded in the appropriate register of sasine, the right of redemption reserved to the debtor shall be extinguished, and the creditor shall have right to the lands disponed in security in the same manner and to the same effect as if the disposition in security had been an irredeemable disposition as from the date of such decree." By section 10 "no purchaser from the creditor or other successor in title in the lands shall be under any duty to inquire into the regularity of the proceedings under which creditor has acquired right to the lands held under his security by virtue of the provisions contained herein, or be affected by any irregularity therein, without prejudice to any competent claim of damages against such creditor."

In 1895 certain creditors presented a petition under section 8 of the above Act. The appellant, the proprietor of the lands, did not appear. The sheriff granted decree. Thereafter the creditors sold the lands and granted dispositions in favour of the purchasers.

In 1901 the original proprietor brought an action against the creditors and purchasers for reduction of the citation and execution of service upon him of the petition in the sheriff court, alleging that the service had been executed by a messenger-at-arms, who was not an officer of the sheriff court; and he pleaded that such service, with all that had followed thereon, including the disposition to the purchasers, was null and ineffectual.

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, [1902] 4 F. 957, that, assuming the service to be as stated, the error was an "irregularity in the proceedings" within the meaning of section 10 of the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, and consequently that the right of the purchasers was not affected thereby.—SUTHERLAND v. THOMSON (MANAGER OF STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE CO.) (Second Appeal), H.L.; [1906] A. C. 51.

3. Poor law—Settlement—Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 21), s. 1.—By the Poor Law Scotland Act, 1898, s. 1, "No person shall be held to have acquired a settlement in any parish in Scotland by residence therein unless such person shall . . . have resided for three years continuously in such parish, and shall have maintained himself without having recourse to common begging either by himself or his family, and without having received or applied for parochial relief."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that if a person had in fact resided for three years in a parish without living on the public rates or begging, it was immaterial whether he had derived his maintenance from his own property or labour, or from the charity of an individual or of a charitable organization; and therefore that a person who had resided for three years in a parish as an inmate of a charitable institution had acquired a settlement in such parish.—KILMALCOLM PARISH COUNCIL v. GLASGOW PARISH COUNCIL, H.L.; [1906] A. SEASHORE:—

Taking shingle from—Prohibition by Board of Trade—Encroachment of sea—Erection of sea-wall—Owner removing shingle from below high-water mark from land which formerly belonged to him—Claim of right—Board of Trade Order—Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), s. 14—Harbours Transfer Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 69), s. 16.—Under the powers given by section 14 of the Harbours Act, 1814, the Board of Trade, for the protection of a certain port, made an order prohibiting the taking or removing of any shingle from the shores or banks of the sea between certain points. The appellant, acting with the authority of the owner of land adjoining the seashore, removed shingle from the foreshore below the then ordinary high-water mark and within the limits prohibited by the order, to another part of the foreshore above high-water mark belonging to the same owner, where it was used to formed concrete for the building of a sea-wall to protect the owner's adjoining property from the encroachment of the sea. The point from which the shingle was taken had a few years before been the property of the owner, but owing to the encroachment of the sea, the sea now ebbed and flowed over the land at the point in question. The shingle was removed solely for the construction of the sea-wall, and to prevent any further encroachment of the sea over the owner's property. Upon an information against the appellant for removing the shingle from the foreshore, in contravention of the order,

Held, that an offence had been committed against the order, and the appellant was properly convicted, notwithstanding that the land from which the shingle was taken was before the encroachment the property of the owner, and that the owner was acting under a bonâ fide claim of right to take the shingle from one part of his property for the protection of another part of his property.—ANDERSON v. JACOBS, K.B.D.; 93 L. SETTLED LAND:—

1. Capital moneys in the hands of trustees—Direction as to investment by tenant for life—Control of court—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 21, 22, sub-section 2; s. 53.—A tenant for life directed the trustees to invest £2,650, part of moneys derived from the sale of settled property, in the purchase of eight leasehold houses. These houses were held for terms, of which more than sixty years were unexpired, but they were proved to be not worth more than £1,400. The trustees took out a summons for the direction of the court under section 44 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, asking whether they were bound to carry out the purchase as directed by the tenant for life.

Held, that the trustees were not bound to make such purchase.—HUNT'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, C.A.; [1906] 2 Ch. 11; 75 L. J. Ch. 496; 94 L. T. 747.

2. Fire insurance—Tenant for life—Premiums paid by trustees out of income—Policy moneys, who entitled to—Gift to trustees of fund.—A tenant for life, under no liability by the settlement to insure and not impeachable for waste, by whose directions a policy of insurance has been kept up on the mansion-house, and the premiums thereon paid out of his income, is entitled as against the trustees of the settlement to money paid by the insurance office in respect of damage to the mansion-house by fire. As regards the reasoning to be applied to such cases, those given by Kindersley, V.C., in Seymour v. Vernon, 16 Jur. 189, and Chitty, J., in Warwicker v. Bretnell, 23 Ch. D. 188, which were cases of tenants in tail, are precisely applicable, and those cases accordingly followed.

The fact that, pending a decision by the tenant for life as to whether he will expend the insurance fund in rebuilding the premises, the money had been invested in the names of the trustees of the settlement during a period of fourteen years,

Held, not, under the circumstances, to amount to an abandonment of the life tenant's right to the fund or a gift of it by him to the trustees for the benefit of the corpus of the settlement fund.—GAUSSEN v. WHATMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 93 L. T. 101.

3. "Improvements"—Application of capital money—Improvements to silk and cotton mill erected on settled land—"Additions to or alterations in buildings"—Sanction of court—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 25, sub-section (xii.)—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 13, sub-section (ii.).—The words "other mills" in section 25, sub-section (xii.), of the Settled Land Act, 1882, means mills for the purpose of developing the agricultural produce of the settled land, and not for commercial purposes; and, therefore, the sub-section does not authorize the expenditure of capital money arising under the Act upon the erection of, or any addition to, or reconstruction of, a silk and cotton mill, the same being for the development of produce imported on to the settled land.

Decision of Joyce, J., affirmed.—HARRINGTON'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, C.A.; 75 L. J. Ch. 460; 94 L. T. 623.

4. Improvements—Approval of trustees—Discretion of trustees—Power of tenant for life—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 25, 26.—A settlement of real estate expressly added certain works for purposes of improvements to those mentioned in section 25 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, for which capital money might be used, and expressly authorized capital money to be raised for improvements as well as for the other purposes mentioned in section 18. The trustees having already approved of schemes submitted to them by the tenant for life under section 26, which had involved outlay of money, and would involve in the future further outlay, and having been asked by the tenant for life to approve of a further scheme, applied by summons to the court for directions whether, before deciding to approve or withhold their approval from such schemes, they might properly have regard to (a) the number of previous schemes and the amount of capital already expended or liable to be called for thereunder; (b) the general connection between the improvements mentioned in the scheme proposed for their approval with improvements contained in schemes already sanctioned, or the general policy which is being pursued by the tenant for life in improving the property; (c) the proportion between the probable cost of the improvements mentioned in the proposed scheme and the probable increased annual value of the estate; (d) the amount of capital moneys in their hands and the relation between such amount and the value of the estate.

Held, that the general policy of the improvement was a matter for the tenant for life and not for the trustees to decide on; and that, there being no difficulty in obtaining capital money, having regard to the power in the settlement, the trustee might properly approve of any scheme where they were satisfied (1) that the improvement was within section 25, and (2) that the tenant for life was acting bonâ fide; and that they were not bound to take into consideration the various matters mentioned in the summons.—EGMONT, RE, LEFROY v. EGMONT, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 504; [1906] 2 Ch. 151.

5. Leaseholds—Enfranchisement—Purchase of freehold reversion—Mortgage of settled land—Capital moneys—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 18, 21 (6).—The word "enfranchisement" in section 18 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is applicable to the conversion of leasehold land into freehold by the purchase of the freehold reversion.

Where, therefore, settled land consists of a leasehold term, the tenant for life (or in the case of an infant absolutely entitled, the trustees of the settlement) can, by virtue of section 18, raise money by mortgage of the settled leasehold land in order to purchase with the money so raised the freehold under section 27, sub-section 6, of the Act of 1882.—BRUCE, RE, HALSEY v. BRUCE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 60; [1905] 2 Ch. 372; 74 L. J. Ch. 578; 93 L. T. 119.

6. Minerals required for support of reservoir—Compensation moneys—Capital or income.—The corporation of D. in 1903 received notice of intention to work coal under their reservoir. The corporation gave a counter-notice, and compensation was ascertained at £2,956 10s., reduced by discount to £2,620. The discount was arrived at by the consideration that the twelve acres under the reservoir would have been worked out in the ordinary course by December, 1908. The money was paid into court. The lessees of the colliery paid a minimum rent of £2,500, with a provision enabling them in any subsequent year of the term to make up short work. The lessees held under a lease made in 1894, but a new lease was granted them in 1905, when an arrangement was made between the lessor, the tenant for life of a settled estate, and the lessees, that credit should be given for £2,956 10s., and that the sum in court should belong to the lessees. The amount due for short work, after crediting the compensation, was upwards of £8,000. The lessees petitioned for payment out of the £2,620.

Held, that the true principle (apart from the short work) was that the tenant for life was entitled to one-fifth of the compensation for each year from 1903 to 1908. The remainderman was bound by the agreement as to short work, but there was a difficulty in paying the whole sum to the lessees, as the lessor might be entitled to re-enter. The petitioners were entitled to instalments already due and to future instalments on making an affidavit on each occasion that they were in possession of the colliery. The tenant for life was entitled to the interest of the fund.—FULLERTON'S WILL, RE, Ch.D., Swinfen Eady J.; [1906] 2 Ch. 138; 75 L. J. Ch. 552; 94 L. T. 667.

7. Tenant for life—Devise to widow until remarriage for maintenance of widow and children—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 58.—A testator gave real estate to trustees upon trust for his wife during widowhood for the benefit and maintenance of herself and her children.

Held, that the widow had the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 58.

8. Tenant for life—Lease—Principal mansion-house—Consent of trustees—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 53—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 10.—A tenant for life of settled land, in exercise of the powers conferred by the Settled Land Acts, granted a non-repairing lease of a messuage and lands, part of the settled estate, to his wife for a term of twenty-one years. The trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts assented to such lease, but did not express such assent either to the lessor or the lessee, orally or otherwise.

Held, that the lease was good as against a remainderman, and not made in contravention of section 53 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and, further, assuming that the demised messuage was the principal mansion-house within the meaning of section 10 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, that a sufficient consent had been given by the trustees under that section.—GILBEY v. RUSH, *Ch.D. 9. Tenant for life—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2 (1) (5).—Freeholds were settled by plaintiff on his marriage, to the use of himself for life, remainder to the use of his wife to receive a jointure during her life, remainder to trustees during a term to raise portions for children, remainder to the plaintiff in fee, Held, that plaintiff was tenant for life within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts.

10. Trustees—Power of sale—Property not originally comprised in the settlement—Trustees for purposes of Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 16 (i).—A testator gave to the trustees of his will a power of sale in respect of part of certain lands devised by him. He also bequeathed his personal residue on trust to sell and convert the same and invest the proceeds in land, which was to be subject to the aforesaid power of sale. No trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, had been expressly appointed. Upon the tenant for life contracting to sell the mansion-house and the land, as to which no power of sale had been given,

Held, that the land purchased with the proceeds of the residuary personalty was land comprised in the settlement within the meaning of section 16 (i) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, and that the trustees of the will were trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, of such mansion-house and land by virtue thereof.—MOORE, RE, MOORE v. BIGG, *Ch.D. SETTLEMENT:—

1. Construction—Survivors—Stirpital survivorship.—Real estate settled by deed upon trust for seven tenants in common for life with remainder to his or her children attaining twenty-one or marrying—proviso that if any one or more of the tenants for life should die without issue or leaving issue which should die under twenty-one or unmarried, the share of such tenant for life should be divided between "the survivors and survivor of them and their issue in all respects as the original shares."

Held, that the same principles apply in the construction of a deed and of a will.

Held, that "survivors and survivor" must be construed "others and other," and that children of tenants for life who had attained twenty-one and died took accrued shares, although they did not survive the tenants for life whose shares had accrued to them.

2. Marriage settlement—Covenant to pay if marriage "solemnized"—Nullity—Impotence.—By an ante-nuptial settlement the father of the wife covenanted to pay a sum of money, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement, if the marriage were "solemnized." A legal marriage ceremony was gone through, but on the petition of the wife a decree of nullity of marriage was made on the ground of the impotence of the husband.

Held, that the marriage having been declared null ab initio was never "solemnized" within the meaning of the condition in the settlement.—GARNETT, RE, RICHARDSON v. GREENEP, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 93 L. T. 117.

3. Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Real and personal property of which wife should "become seised or possessed of or entitled to"—Estate tail in possession.—A marriage settlement, dated in 1877, contained a covenant by the husband and wife with the trustees thereof that if the intended marriage should be solemnized and if the wife then was or if during the intended coverture she or the husband in her right should become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property, with certain specified exceptions, for any estate or interest in possession, remainder, or expectancy, then and in every such case the husband and wife and all other necessary parties should convey, assign, settle, and assure such real and personal estate unto or otherwise cause the same to be vested in the trustees to be held upon the trusts therein mentioned.

Under the will of a testatrix the wife became entitled in possession as tenant in tail in certain estates.

Held, that the wife was not compelled to convey the property devised to her by the will to the trustees of the marriage settlement in fee, or to execute to the trustees such a conveyance of the property as would by being enrolled have given to them an estate in fee simple in the property.

SHIP:—

1. Bill of lading—Goods shipped in apparent damaged condition—Misstatement—"Shipped in good order and condition"—"Quality and measure unknown"—Estoppel—Harter Act, 1893 (U.S.).—A master of a vessel signed bills of lading in reference to goods shipped on his vessel as "shipped in good order and condition" and "quality and measure unknown." The charter-party provided a form of the bill of lading to be used, in which was inserted both these terms. The goods were in apparent damaged condition when shipped, and were delivered in a damaged condition. The indorsees of the bills of lading, to whom the property passed, acting on the statement in the bills of lading, acted to their prejudice by taking the bills of lading as a good delivery under their contract with the shippers. The indorsees, in an arbitration with the shippers—a foreign firm, who were not insolvent—obtained an award, but had not sued upon it. Owing to damaged condition of the goods, expense and delay were incurred in allotting the parcels to the indorsees.

Held, that the master by so signing the bills of lading bound his owners; that it was the duty of the master to notice the apparent condition of the goods; that "condition" referred to external and apparent condition; and "quality" referred to that which was not usually apparent, at all events to an unskilled person; that the words "quality and measure unknown" did not strike out the words "good order and condition"; that the master was not bound by the charter-party to make an untrue statement; that the words "shipped in good order and condition" could not be sued on directly as a breach of contract, they were words not of promise but in the nature of an affirmation of fact; that the owners were estopped from denying the condition of the goods as stated; and that the indorsees were not bound to sue upon their award against the shippers before suing the owners of the ship.—COMPANIA NAVIERA VASCONGADA v. CHURCHILL & SIM, K.B.D., 406; [1906] 1 K. B. 237; 75 L. J. K. B. 94; 94 L. T. 59.

2. Charter-party—Bill of lading—Incorporation of terms of charter-party—Arbitration clause—Cesser clause—Dispute "in the loading"—Demurrage.—By a charter-party the plaintiffs' steamer was to load a cargo at Bahia Blanca for a port in the United Kingdom at a certain rate per day, and all time on demurrage over and above the lay days to be paid for according to a certain rate; the charterers' liability to cease upon shipment of the cargo, and the vessel to have a lien on the cargo for the recovery of all bill of lading freight, dead freight, demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever. By clause 39, if the cargo could not be loaded from certain specified causes, the time lost was not to be counted as part of the lay days, and "should any dispute arise under this clause in the loading of the steamer, same to be settled in the Argentine Republic by" arbitration. The cargo was shipped under a bill of lading which made it deliverable to the charterers, they paying freight against delivery at the charter-party rate of freight "all the terms and exceptions in which charter-party . . . are herewith incorporated and form part hereof," the shipowners to have an absolute lien upon the cargo for the freight, demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever. A delay occurred in the loading, and on the completion of the loading the master of the ship claimed demurrage, but the charterers denied liability upon the ground that the delay was due to one of the causes specified in clause 39 of the charter-party. The charterers requested that the dispute should be referred to arbitration under that clause. The master refused, and the vessel sailed. On arrival at the port of discharge the shipowners claimed a lien for demurrage due at the port of loading, and brought an action to recover the amount. The charterers applied, under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to stay the proceedings in the action with a view to having the dispute settled by arbitration in accordance with clause 39.

Held, that, notwithstanding the cesser clause in the charter-party, inasmuch as the charterers were also the holders of the bill of lading the arbitration clause was incorporated in the bill of lading, and the court had jurisdiction to stay the proceedings in the action; and that in the circumstances, in the exercise of its discretion, it would do so.

Held, also, that a dispute arises "in the loading" within the meaning of clause 39 if the loading is claimed by one party and denied by the other to have been delayed by one of the causes named in the clause, and none the less because the extent of the delay cannot be ascertained until the loading has been completed.

3. Charter-party—Charter of ship for voyage—Implied condition that shipowner will not use ship in manner prejudicial to the charterer—Carriage of bunker coal intended for use on future voyage.—The plaintiffs chartered the defendants' ship to load "a full and complete cargo . . . not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over her tackle, apparel, provisions and furniture," and proceeded therewith to two or three ports of discharge. On arrival of the ship at her first port of discharge the defendants took on board a large quantity of bunker coal intended for use, not upon the existing voyage, but upon some prospective voyage to be commenced after her final discharge. In consequence of the loading of the coal, the ship, on arriving at her next port of discharge, had to be lightened before she could get over the bar, whereby the plaintiffs were put to considerable expense. But for the loading of the coal she would have been able to enter the port without lightening.

Held, that under such a charter-party the shipowner is not entitled to load, to the disadvantage of the charterer, more bunker coal than is reasonably necessary for the seaworthiness of the ship upon the chartered voyage and for the due performance of that voyage; that there is an implied term in the contract that the ship shall, except as aforesaid, be used only for the purpose of the charterers; and that the defendants had consequently committed a breach of their contract and were bound to recoup the plaintiffs the expense to which they had been put.—DARLING v. RAEBURN, K.B.D.; [1906] 1 K. B. 572; 75 L. J. K. B. 415.

4. Charter-party — Demurrage — Discharging in customary manner—Discharging subject to lien—Time when such discharge can take place—Barry Port—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 493, 494.—A charter-party provided for the discharge of a vessel to be "in the manner and at the rate customary at each port during the customary working hours, and if the ship be further detained through the fault of the charterers, ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days at twenty pounds per day." Until it is clear that the ship cannot be discharged within the time allowed, the shipowner cannot insist on landing the cargo, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, subject to a lien.—SMAILES v. HANS DESSEN, K.B.D., 471; 94 L. T. 492.

5. Charter-party—Liability of charterer to provide cargo—Delay.—The charterer is under an absolute obligation to furnish the stipulated cargo, and is liable for delay caused by the cargo not being ready, in the absence of some qualification of the obligation.

A ship was under charter "to proceed to such loading berth as the freighters may name" at M., and there "load in the usual and customary manner a full and complete cargo of coals as ordered by the charterers, which they bind themselves to ship." The charterers had ordered coals from a particular collier which was not able to provide a cargo at the time of the arrival of the ship, and she was therefore unable to obtain a loading berth for some time. If the cargo had been ready she could have got a loading berth at once.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the charterers were liable for the delay so occasioned.

7. Collision—Fog—Moderate speed—Fog signal forward of the beam—Duty of vessel hearing it to stop—Ascertained position—Right of vessel to proceed—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 16.—The steamship O., while on a voyage from Liverpool to Monte Video, was off Lobos Island, River Plate, proceeding at ten knots on a course of W. ½ N. The weather was fine with passing banks of fog, and shortly after entering the fog The O. came into collision with The N., a steamship which had been heard on the starboard bow of The O.

after that vessel had entered the fog. The N. was on a course of E. by S. magnetic, and, having first seen The O. on the port bow about three miles off in a position to pass all clear port to port, watched her broaden on the port bow, and saw her hidden by the fog which came on. Shortly afterwards those on The N. heard a short blast sounded on the whistle of The O. The N. answered it with a short blast, her helm was ported, and, as the fog was beginning to envelop The N., her engines were put to slow, and, on further signals being heard from The O., were put full speed astern, and shortly afterwards the collision occurred.

Held, that The O. was to blame for not going at a moderate speed in the fog; and that The N. was not to blame for not stopping her engines on hearing the whistle of The O., as under the circumstances the position of The O. was ascertained—"ORAVIA," THE, P.D.; 93 L. T. 278.

8. Collision—Limitation of liability—Right of charterer by demise to limit—"Owners"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 503, 504.—Sir J. J. (Limited) hired from the owners the steam Hopper No. 66 for eighteen months upon terms which amounted to a demise of the hopper to Sir J. J. (Limited).

While the hopper was still on hire, and while being navigated by the servants of Sir J. J. (Limited), she collided with and sank the steamship B. The owners of The B. and her master and crew then brought an action in personam against Sir J. J. (Limited) to recover damages caused by negligence, and in that action recovered judgment, the Hopper No. 66 being held alone to blame.

The charterers of the Hopper No. 66 (Sir J. J. (Limited)) then instituted proceedings as "owners" of the Hopper No. 66 claiming to limit their liability under sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60).

Held, that charterers by demise are not "owners" within the meaning of section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore have not the right to limit their liability in respect of loss or damage caused by the improper navigation of the chartered ship by their servants.—THE HOPPER No. 66, P.D.; [1906] P. 34; 94 L. T. 344.

9. Collision—Steam trawler—Lights—Trawler's duty to sailing vessel—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, arts. 2, 9, 20, 26.—The steam trawler U. C., a vessel of upwards of twenty tons gross register, fishing in the Bristol Channel, exhibited the lights prescribed by article 9 of the Collision Regulations. After getting in her trawl The U. C. went full speed ahead, still exhibiting the lights prescribed by article 9 of the Collision Regulations, and very shortly afterwards ran into the sailing vessel R. Those on The R. had seen the lights of The U. C. for about half an hour before the collision, and after getting them on the starboard bow had kept their course.

Held, that the steam trawler The U. C. was alone to blame for the collision, for at the time of the collision it was her duty to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel, and as she was a steam vessel under command she should have exhibited the usual under way lights for such a vessel prescribed by article 2 of the Collision Regulations, and should have hoisted them before going ahead.—"UPTON CASTLE," THE, P.D.; 93 L. T. 814.

10. Collision—Steam vessel lying-to—Crossing rule—Duty of steam vessel when lying-to to keep out of the way—Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 19.—The L., a steam trawler, was lying-to heading to the N. with engines stopped, waiting for the tide, when she was run into and damaged by the steamship B., which was proceeding on a course of W. ½ S. magnetic. Those on The B. saw the masthead and green lights on their port bow, and kept their course and speed until just before the collision, when they slowed, stopped, and reversed their engines. Those on The L. did nothing.

Held, that article 19 of the Collision Regulations applied, and that The L. alone was to blame for the collision.—"BROOMFIELD," THE, P.D.; 94 L. T. 109.

11. Collision—Steam vessels meeting end on—Absence of whistle signals—Impossibility for contributing to the collision—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 28.—Two steamships, The A. and The C., when two miles apart, were meeting each other end on in the Para Estuary, River Amazon. Those on The A. ported their helm, but did not sound a port helm signal on their whistle until they saw The C. was starboarding. Thereupon those on The A. sounded a port helm signal, and shortly afterwards The C. sounded a long blast and continued to starboard, the engines of The A. were stopped and reversed, but a three-blast signal was not sounded on her whistle.

Held, that The C. was to blame for starboarding when the vessels were approaching each other end on, and that The A. was not to blame for not sounding a port helm signal when she first ported, for those on The C. could have seen The A. was porting, and the absence of signals could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision.—"ANSELM," THE, P.D.; 94 L. T. 853.

12. Collision—Suez Canal—Lights—Duty of vessel proceeding to the southward to tie up—Duty of vessel proceeding to the northward to approach with caution—Rules for the Navigation of the Suez Canal, arts. 3, 7, 8, sub-sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, and signal 11.—The steamship C. was proceeding through the Suez Canal from Port Said to Suez. When in the neighbourhood of the seventh mile-post, those on The C. sighted the navigation lights of a vessel approaching from the southward. It was admittedly the practice in that part of the canal for steamships navigating to the southward to tie up to permit vessels proceeding to the northward to pass them, and The C. therefore drew into the bank. Those on The C. extinguished their navigating lights and exhibited the lights required by signal No. 11 of the Suez Canal Rules on the free side of the channel. The C. was being tied up when she was run into and damaged by The C. C., a steamship proceeding from the southward to the northward from Suez to Port Said. Those on The C. C. alleged that they had the right of way, and that The C. had kept on too long and had proceeded too fast.

Held, that though the north-going steamer, The C. C., had the right of way, yet there was a duty on her to keep herself under such command that, in the event of her coming up to a steamship which had to tie up for her sooner than was expected, she could, by stopping or going astern, avoid running into the steamship which had to give way, and that as The C. was stopped at the time of the collision, she was not to blame.—"CLAN CUMMING," THE, P.D.; 94 L. T. 174.

13. Collision—Tug and tow—Fog—Duty of tug to stop on hearing a fog signal forward of her beam—Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897.—The tug C was towing the barque Duc d' Ain a dense fog in the English Channel, near the Royal Sovereign Lightship, on a course of W.S.W., when the fog signal of the steamship C, which was on a course of E. ½ N., was heard on the starboard bows of the tug and tow. The tug did not stop her engines on hearing the first fog signal, but on hearing a second fog signal, and seeing the loom of the steamship C., she stopped them. The steamship C stopped her engines on first hearing the fog signal of the tug and tow.

Held, that as the tug could have stopped her engines on first hearing the fog signal of the steamship without encountering difficulty with her tow, she was to blame for not doing so, and that the tug and tow were to blame for not stopping in accordance with article 16 of the collision regulations.

14. Collision — Vessel not used for profit — Demurrage—Measure of damages.—The damages to be awarded to a dock board, charged with the duty of maintaining a harbour but not entitled to distribute profits, in respect of delay in their work, which they have suffered by reason of damage done to one of their dredgers in a collision caused by the negligence of the defendants' servants, may rightly be taken to be the equivalent to the cost of the work to the owners had that work been done.

15. Compulsory pilotage—Exemption in favour of "coasting vessel"—Vessel sailing under foreign-going articles—Vessel taking cargo at port in United Kingdom to be discharged at another port in United Kingdom—Compulsory pilot—Bristol Wharfage Act, 1807 (47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. xxxiii.), s. 9—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 603, sub-section 2.—A ship sailing under foreign-going articles left Swansea and went to various ports within and without the United Kingdom. She went from Dieppe to Hull in ballast, and at Hull she took in a cargo to be discharged at Bristol, and went from Hull with such cargo to Bristol, where she discharged her cargo, still sailing under the same articles. When on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, the ship was proceeding up the Bristol Channel, and was within the limits of the port of Bristol, within which, by section 9 of the Bristol Wharfage Act, 1807, pilotage by a Bristol pilot is compulsory for all vessels except "coasting vessels and Irish traders." The master refused to take a compulsory pilot on board, on the ground that the ship during the voyage from Hull to Bristol was a "coasting vessel" within the meaning of the exemption by reason of her having taken in cargo at Hull destined to be discharged at Bristol, both ports being within the United Kingdom.

Held, that the ship was not a "coasting vessel" at the time in question, and the fact that she took in cargo at Hull, a port in the United Kingdom, which she was going to discharge at Bristol, another port in the United Kingdom, did not make her a "coasting vessel" on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, and that the master was properly convicted, under section 603, sub-section 2, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for having, within a district where pilotage was compulsory, refused to take a pilot on board.—PHILLIPS v. BORN, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 634.

16. Dock—Unpaid dock dues—Statutory right of dock board to detain ship until dues paid—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 42), s. 253.—The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board have statutory power, while any dock or harbour rates remain unpaid in respect of any vessel, to "cause such vessel to be detained until all such rates have been paid."

A vessel in the Mersey Docks, in respect of which dock rates were unpaid, was sold under an order of an Admiralty Court in an action by the master and crew for wages. The board having refused to allow the vessel to leave the dock until the rates were paid, an order was made that the vessel should "be delivered to the purchaser free from all claims and demands against her upon payment of the purchase-money into court," and that "any right of the board to payment of their charges in priority to other claimants" should be preserved as against the fund in court.

Held (allowing the appeal), that the right of the dock board to detain the vessel until all rates were paid was absolute, and that no order could be made for the delivery of the vessel from the dock until all the dock rates were paid.—"EMILIE MILLON," THE, C.A.; 75 L. J. K. B. 31; 93 L. T. 692.

17. Equitable ownership—Contribution to expenses of voyage—Foreigner equitable owner of a share in a British ship—Unregistered bill of sale.—A person who has a contract with the registered owner of a ship under which the latter is a mere nominee bound to act as the former directs, bound to pay him the profits, bound to transfer upon demand, is an equitable owner. A person who has a bill of sale, and has only to register it, is an equitable owner.

A person is an equitable owner where a specific share is held by the registered owner as security for a sum of money, but otherwise on his behalf.

It does not matter whether the equitable owner has obtained his bill of sale from the legal owner or whether he has not advanced so far. Any declaration of trust by the legal owner, any state of facts acquiesced in by both parties which establishes the relation of trustee and cestui que trust as to a specific share or shares makes the cestui que trust equitable owner, and as such part owner liable to contribute to the expenses of a voyage.

If the so-called trustee merely has a duty to find a share when the agreed conditions are complied with, or where there is a mere contractual relation as to profits, or where the trustee has active duties to perform, while behind him there are persons who have various beneficial interests in the profits, there is no equitable ownership, and the so-called trustee is the owner.

A foreigner who was paid in full for a share in a British ship, and has received but not registered a bill of sale, is an equitable owner, and as part owner liable to contribution for the expenses of a voyage.—VON FREEDEN v. HULL, BLYTH, & Co., K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 849.

18. King's ship—Pilotage dues—Liability of master —Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 66), ss. 501, 741—Bristol Channel Pilotage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. clxxxvi.), s. 35.—A collier owned by his Majesty's Government was exclusively engaged in going backwards and forwards carrying coal for the Navy. She appeared in the Navy List under the heading "List of small steam vessels, tugs, &c., employed on harbour service." Her master was not an officer of the Royal Navy. On divers occasions the master of the collier employed a licensed pilot for the port of Cardiff, and the pilot took proceedings under section 591 of the Merchant Shipping Act against the master to recover pilotage dues according to the scale imposed by bye-laws made in pursuance of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and a local Act (in which the Crown were not mentioned) under which the pilots were licensed.

Held, that the collier was a king's ship, and therefore came within the exemption conferred by section 741 of the Merchant Shipping Act, and that the master of the King's ship was not liable to pay pilotage dues on the scale contemplated by the bye-laws.—SYMONS v. BAKER, K.B.D., 159; [1905] 2 K. 19. Mercantile law—Naval court—Jurisdiction—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 225, 480-486.—A naval court summoned in accordance with sections 480-486 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is a court of record, and its orders cannot be impeached providing they are "duly" made—i.e., providing the proceedings are regular and the matter is one within the jurisdiction of the court. The powers given to a naval court by section 483 of the said Act may be exercised in respect to offences under section 225. Hence the court has power to "discharge a seaman from his ship" for an offence under section 225, which provides that the seaman for such offence "shall be liable to be punished" summarily.—HUTTON v. RAS STEAMSHIP CO., K.B.D., 182; 94 L. T. 645.

20. Limitation of liability—Title of suit—Description of plaintiffs—Life claims—Bail in lieu of payment into court.—Where the owners of a vessel seek to limit their liability in respect of a collision under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 503, 504, it is not sufficient to describe the plaintiffs on the writ as "The owners of the ship or vessel," for, the action being one for personal relief, the names of the owners of the vessel at the time of the collision should be set out on the face of the writ.

Where the owners of the vessel at fault institute a suit for the purpose of limiting their liability in respect of a collision which has caused loss of life, and in respect of which loss of life the claims made do not amount to the total limit of the owners' statutory liability, the court may grant a decree on their giving bail for an amount to be fixed by the court and an undertaking to give bail if required for the balance of their statutory liability instead of requiring them to pay into court the total amount of their statutory liability in respect of the life claims.—"INVENTOR," THE, P.D.; 93 L.T. 189.

21. Necessaries—Insurance premiums—Payment by brokers—Right of broker and underwriter to recover by action in rem—Admiralty Court Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 65), s. 6.—Sums paid by a broker as insurance premiums for the purpose of effecting insurances on the hull and safe arrival of a vessel or sums due to underwriters as premiums cannot be recovered by the broker or by the underwriters as necessaries within the meaning of section 6 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1840; and, as such sums are not necessaries, the broker and underwriters have no right to proceed against the ship in rem.—"ANDRE THEODORE," THE, P.D.; 93 L. T. 184.

22. Pilotage—Decision of pilotage authority—Appeal—Extension of time—Pilotage—Appeal Rules (Stipendiary and Metropolitan Police Magistrates), 1890, r. 1.—A magistrate has power under rule 1 of the Pilotage Appeal Rules (Stipendiary and Metropolitan Police Magistrates), 1890, r. 1, to extend the time for appealing although the prescribed time has expired before the date of the application for the extension.—REX v. LEWIS, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 307; 75 L. J. K. B. 508.

23. Salvage—Action by default—Derelict vessel—Amount of award.—The L., a derelict schooner on fire in the North Sea, was taken in tow by the tug D. The tug beached her, and, with the assistance of another tug, extinguished the fire.

The owners of The D. instituted proceedings to recover salvage, and arrested The L. No appearance was entered on behalf of the owners of The L., and the action proceeded by default. Before the trial of the action The L. was appraised and sold by the marshal and realized £255. The marshal's expenses amounted to £108 14s. 6d., and the net proceeds, £146 5s. 6d., were paid into court. The salvors had paid £88 18s. 6d. for assistance rendered to them in salving the vessel, and were liable for harbour dues amounting to £21 17s. 9d.

Held, that under the circumstances the salvors were entitled to the balance of the fund as salvage.—"LOUISA," THE, P.D.; [1906] P. 145; 75 L. J. P. 76; 94 L. T. 558.

24. Salvage—Award—Apportionment—Navigation and engineer officers' ratings—Separate representation of some members of crew—Costs.—The tank steamship L. fell in with the disabled twin-screw steamship B. in the North Atlantic and towed her into Halifax, a distance of about 280 miles. The B.'s boat was employed in passing the hawsers and making the vessels fast. No member of the crew of The L. performed any special service.

On the 1st of December, 1905, the solicitors acting for the owners of The L., without any direct authority from the crew, who numbered thirty-six, issued a writ on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of The L., claiming salvage for services rendered to The B., her cargo and freight, and on the 12th of December, 1905, delivered a statement of claim on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of The L., to which on the 27th of December the owners of The B. delivered a defence.

On the 18th of December twelve of the crew of The L.—four able seamen and eight firemen—gave notice to the defendants' solicitors of a change of solicitors, and on the 5th of January, 1906, a further statement of claim was delivered on behalf of the twelve, and on the 10th of January the owners of The B. delivered a defence to that claim.

On the hearing of the salvage suits the owners, master, and twenty-four of the crew were represented by two counsel, and the remaining twelve of the crew were also separately represented by two counsel. Counsel for the owners, master, and twenty-four of the crew, when asking for an apportionment, stated that if the usual practice was followed of apportioning the salvage among the crew according to their rating, the effect would be that the engineer officers would receive more than the navigating officers, who probably had had harder work in consequence of the salvage than the engineer officers had had.

Held, that, as the navigating officers had not taken any extraordinary part in the salvage service, they were not entitled to an increased share in the award, which would be apportioned amongst the crew according to their rating.

Held, that the twelve seamen were not entitled to costs, but that they were not to be condemned in costs.—"BREMEN," THE, P.D.; 94 L. T. 380.

25. Salvage—Co-salvors—Consolidated suits—Separate representation—Counsel—Costs.—The P., a four-masted steel barque of 2,138 tons register, while on a voyage from Belfast to Antwerp in tow of the tug H., which was under contract to tow her to Flushing, met with heavy weather, and, while running for shelter, broke adrift from The H., but managed to bring up near Pladda Island with a full scope of chain on both her anchors. When The H. came up to The P. it was found that the anchor chains of the latter were foul, that the anchors could not be raised, and that they would have to be slipped. The master of The P. then sent The H. for further assistance, and The H. brought back the tug F. S. The H. and F. S. then took The P. to Greenock, where she was safely moored. The owners, masters, and crews of both tugs instituted proceedings for salvage, the owners of The H. claiming that the towage contract had been superseded by the events which had happened. The salvage suits were consolidated, the conduct of the action being given to the owners of The F. S. At the trial of the action The H. was represented by a leading and junior counsel. The F. S. was also represented by two counsel. The court awarded each salvor £300. Counsel for The H. asked for a certificate for the separate representation of The H. by two counsel.

Held, that as the defendants had alleged that The H. was not entitled to salvage, but was only fulfilling her agreement, the owners of The H. were entitled to be separately represented by two counsel.—"POLTALLOCH," THE, P.D, 94 L. T. 556.

26. Seamen—Repatriation of seamen—Payment by consul—Norwegian law.—By the Norwegian Maritime Code, if a ship is "lost," the expenses of sending home the master and crew are defrayed by the State, and, therefore, as such expenses do not ultimately fall upon the owners of the ship which is lost, they are not recoverable by them from the owners of the wrong-doing ship which caused the loss.—"CRAFTSMAN," THE, P.D.; [1906] P. 153.

27. Seaman — Wages — Agreement for ordinary voyage—Discovery by crew that cargo is contraband of war for belligerent port—Refusal to proceed on voyage —Termination of service—Claim for wages—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 134, 158.—A seaman signed articles to serve on board a British ship for a voyage not exceeding two years to ports in the East, proceeding to Hong-kong and thereafter trading to ports in any rotation and ending at a port in the United Kingdom. War then existed between Russia and Japan, and coal had been declared contraband of war. The vessel left with a cargo of coal to Hong-kong or Shanghai as might be ordered at Singapore. On the voyage to Singapore the cargo was sold for Nagasaki in Japan, and on the arrival of the ship at Singapore the master received orders from the owner to go to Nagasaki instead of Hong-kong. At Singapore it first came to the knowledge of the crew that the ship was to go to Nagasaki instead of Hong-kong. They refused to proceed to Nagasaki on account of the increased risk and danger in going to a belligerent port with contraband of war. It was then arranged by the master that the crew should remain at Singapore and that he would call for them on his way back. He took another crew on board, went to Nagasaki, delivered the coal, and left that port, but on her way back the ship was driven ashore, was got off, and was taken to Hong-kong. It was not proved that she became a wreck. The seaman was sent home with the rest of the crew and arrived in London. He claimed his wages up to the date of his arrival in London, upon the ground that the agreement was broken by the owner when the ship was ordered to Nagasaki. When he made the agreement he had no knowledge that he would be required to sail with contraband of war to a belligerent port.

Held, that, there having been no wreck or loss of the ship which would terminate the service under section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and there having been no termination by the discharge of the seaman under the terms of the contract or under the provisions of the Act, either at home or abroad, the seaman was entitled to his wages up to the date of his arrival in London.—LLOYD v. SHEEN, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 174.

28. Seaman—Wages—Contraband of war—Non-disclosure that cargo for belligerent port—Refusal by seaman to proceed.—The respondent (a seaman) signed articles at Glasgow for a voyage on the British steamship G. of "not exceeding three years' duration to any ports or places within the limits of 75 degrees north and 60 degrees south latitude commencing at Glasgow, proceeding thence to Hong-kong, viâ the Bristol Channel, thereafter trading to ports in any rotation, and to end at such port in the United Kingdom or continent of Europe (within home trade limits) as may be required by the master."

The vessel proceeded to Cardiff, where she was loaded with a cargo of coal. At the time the articles were signed a state of war existed between Russia and Japan, and both Powers had declared coal to be contraband of war.

The appellant knew at the time of the loading of the vessel at Cardiff that the cargo was destined for the Japanese port of Sasebo, but did not disclose this information to the respondent and the rest of crew. Sasebo is within the limits prescribed in the articles.

Upon arrival at Hong-kong the respondent discovered the port of destination, and refused to proceed in the vessel. He remained at Hong-kong until she returned, when he rejoined her and returned to Cardiff.

Held, that the respondent was entitled to wages and maintenance while he was waiting at Hong-kong.—SIBERY v. CONNELLY, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 198.

29. Seaman—Wages—End of voyage—Agreement —Port within home trading limits as required by master—Port where cargo is discharged—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 113, 114 (2) (a), 115 (5), 116.—A seaman shipped at Cardiff under an agreement for "a voyage not exceeding one year's duration to any ports or places within the limits of seventy-five degrees north latitude and sixty degrees south latitude, commencing at Cardiff, proceeding thence to Malta, thereafter trading to ports in any rotation, and to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe within home trading limits as may be required by the master." The vessel sailed from Cardiff for Malta and then to a Black Sea port, where she loaded a cargo for Southampton. On arrival at Southampton she discharged the whole of her cargo, and the seaman demanded his wages and his discharge upon the ground that the voyage was at an end. The master refused, stating that the voyage was not at an end until the ship got back to Cardiff, and that the seaman would have to go on with the ship to that port.

Held, that the master had, by the agreement, the power of fixing at what port within home trading limits the voyage was to end, and that the voyage did not necessarily end at the port within home trading limits where the cargo was finally discharged.—"SCARSDALE," THE, C.A., 335; [1906] P. 103; 75 L. J. P. 31; 94 L. T. 528.

30. Seaman—Wages—Termination of service by loss—Capture—Destruction—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 158.—Section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that where the service of a seaman terminates before the date contemplated in the agreement by reason of the wreck or loss of the ship, the seaman shall be entitled to wages up to the time of such termination, but not for any longer period.

Held, by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., that a "loss" of the ship occurs when the ship ceases to exist as a ship; by Darling, J., that a "loss" occurs when the vessel is captured and the owner deprived of her, and that the fact that the vessel was subsequently destroyed was immaterial in considering whether the capture of the vessel was a "loss" within the meaning of the above section or not.

A seaman signed articles for a voyage to places including ports in Japan, Manchuria, and Siberia. Russia was then at war with Japan, and the ship was captured by a Russian man-of-war, and a few days later was destroyed by the Russians. There was no evidence that she was carrying contraband of war or that her capture was justified. The seamen were sent to England as distressed seamen, and claimed wages up to the time of their arrival in England.

Held, per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Ridley, J., that the ship was "lost" at the time when the ship was destroyed, and, therefore, that the seamen were only entitled to wages up to that time; per Darling, J., that wages ceased when the ship was captured.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Carrying on business of bookmaker—No certificate taken out while carrying on business.—The respondent, a solicitor, who had ceased to practise in 1898 and had not since taken out a certificate, carried on the business of a bookmaker, and in the course of his business had sent circulars to a minor, a married woman, and a bank manager.

Held, that the respondent had been guilty of conduct unworthy of a member of the profession, and must be struck off the rolls, but that it would be open to him if he bonâ fide abandoned the business to apply to the Master of the Rolls for reinstatement.—SOLICITOR. A, RE, THE LAW SOCIETY, EX PARTE, K.B.D.; 93 L. T. 838.

2. Costs—Amendment—Alterations—Omissions—After verdict—Taxation—Reference—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37.—A., a solicitor, delivered to his client B. a bill of costs which he subsequently amended by a second bill of costs increased by certain items omitted from the first bill. Subsequently A. brought an action upon the second bill of costs against B., who pleaded (1) no retainer, (2) no right of action upon an amended bill of costs. It was agreed by the parties at the trial of the action that only the question of liability should go to the jury. Upon this question the jury gave their verdict in favour of the plaintiff.

Held, that the bill sued upon—i.e., the second bill—could not after verdict be sent by the judge to a taxing-master to be taxed under section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, but could only be sent as a reference under the general jurisdiction of the court to order a reference as to quantum. Upon such reference it would be open to the defendants to put forward the first bill of costs as evidence of what the proper charges should be.

Semble (per Vaughan Williams, L.J.), that, although the taxing-master, acting as a referee, would bring to bear upon the question the principles of taxation, yet all the principles applicable to taxation of a bill of costs would not necessarily apply, e.g., the rule that the solicitor must pay the costs of taxation if one-sixth part of the bill be taxed off.

Per Moulton, L.J.—A solicitor may amend bonâ fide his bill of costs at any time before an order of taxation has been obtained or taxation has been threatened by the client.—LUMSDEN v. SHIPCOTE LAND PROPERTY CO., C.A., 461.

3. Costs—Debenture-holder action—Plaintiff's solicitors' costs, charges, and expenses—Property recovered or preserved—Charging order—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28.—The plaintiff brought an action on behalf of himself and the other debenture-holders to realize their security.

Held, that the solicitor was entitled to a charging order for the difference between the plaintiff's party and party and solicitor and client costs of the action, on the fund belonging to the debenture-holders, because the plaintiff was unable to pay such difference.—HOARE & SONS (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 278; [1906] 1 Ch. 271; 75 L. J. Ch. 206.

4. Costs—Taxation—Disbursement—Stamp duty on share capital of company—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 112—Finance Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), s. 7—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37.—A payment made by a solicitor on behalf of the promoter of a company in respect of the ad valorem stamp duty payable on the nominal share capital of the company under section 112 of the Stamp Act, 1891, as extended by section 7 of the Finance Act, 1899, is not a "disbursement" within the meaning of section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, and ought not to be included in his bill of costs.—BLAIR & GIRLING, RE, C.A., 549; [1906] 2 K. B. 131; 75 L. J. K. B. 624; 94 L. T. 873.

5. Costs—Taxation—Taxing-master's certificate—Alteration by substitution of item—Correction of arithmetical error—Inclusion in bill of costs of deposit under Bankruptcy Rules, r. 147—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73).—On a review of taxation of bills of costs,

Held, that the taxing-master may not allow an improper item in a bill to stand in place of a proper item omitted, but that he may correct an arithmetical error, because he and his client are equally able to check the result in the latter case. A deposit paid under rule 147 of the Bankruptcy Rules, on presentation of a bankruptcy petition, is properly included in a bill of costs.

7. Taxation of costs—Solicitor and client costs—Inclusion of taxed party and party costs—Method of calculation of one-sixth part—Disbursements—Professional charges—Existing practice in taxing office—Taxation of liquidator's bill of costs—Ord. 65, r. 27 (38b).—In a bill of costs of a retiring liquidator to be taxed as between solicitor and client, costs which have been already taxed and paid as between party and party are properly included, and in determining whether one-sixth part of the bill has been disallowed, these party and party costs must be treated as part of the bill, and in determining the same question the professional charges are alone to be considered, and disbursements should be disregarded. These principles apply both to bills taxed under the Solicitors Acts and to others. The existing practice of the Taxing Office upon this question is not in accordance with the rules, and is incorrect.—MERCANTILE LIGHTERAGE CO., RE, Ch.D. Warrington J., 389; [1906] 1 Ch. 491; 75 L. TELEPHONE:—

Rival systems in same exchange area—Intercommunication—Proper facilities—Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), s. 3, sub-sections 1, 4, 5.—A telephone company had before September, 1902, established a system of public telephonic communication in a certain area. Under the Telegraph Act, 1899, the Postmaster-General granted a licence to a municipal corporation over the same area, and extended the then existing licence of the company for such a period as to call section 3, sub-section 5, into operation. The corporation established and opened their system, and made a request for intercommunication within section 3, sub-section 5, having at that time the number of subscribers required to satisfy article 1 of the Telegraph (Intercommunication) Order, 1899. The company refused to allow the corporation to connect with their system unless they provided junction circuits directly to connect their exchange both with its central exchange and also with each of its subsidiary exchanges within the area.

It was decided by Buckley, J. (92 L. T. Rep. 799), that proper facilities within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 5, of the Telegraph Act, 1899, were facilities for using all the several component parts of the system, and that the object of the Act was that the customer of each company should use the trunk line of the other company; also, that the defendants had improperly refused to give such proper facilities.

The defendants appealed.

The Court of Appeal, being of opinion that Buckley, J., had taken a view which was unduly favourable to the plaintiffs, submitted certain questions to a scientific referee for inquiry and report.

Held, that, having regard to the replies contained in that report, while under section 3, sub-section 5, of the Act of 1899 and the Order of 1899 made pursuant thereto, and in the events which had happened, the plaintiffs were entitled to be afforded by the defendants all proper facilities for restricted intercommunication within the meaning of that order between persons using the telephonic system of the defendants and the telephonic system of the plaintiffs, yet certain specified junction circuits ought to be provided in order to afford such proper facilities.

Order of Buckley, J., varied.—SWANSEA CORPORATION v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., C.A.; 94 L. T. 565.

TRADE-MARK:—

False trade description—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 2, 3.—The appellant sold in the ordinary course of business a hundredweight of soda, which was described in the invoices as "soda crystals." The mixture, when analyzed, was found to contain crystallized carbonate of soda mixed with Glauber salts, or crystallized sulphate of soda, varying in the different samples from 18 to 64 per cent. The evidence showed that the term "soda crystals" meant ordinary washing soda, and that that article consisted of crystallized carbonate of soda containing not more than 2 per cent. of sulphate of soda or Glauber salts. He was charged on an information with having applied to the goods a false trade description.

Held (Darling, J., dissenting), that the description of the mixture sold as "soda crystals" was a false trade description within the meaning of section 3 of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887, and that the appellant was properly convicted.—FOWLER v. CRIPPS, K.B.D., 299; [1906] 1 K. 2. Wilfully withhold—Criminal mind—Branch union—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 12.—Section 12 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, provides: "If any officer, member, or other person being or representing himself to be a member of a trade union, registered under this Act . . . by false representation or imposition obtain possession of any moneys, securities, books, papers, or other effects of such trades union, or having the same in his possession, wilfully withhold or fraudulently misapply the same, or wilfully apply any part of the same to purposes other than those expressed or directed in the rules of such trade union, or any part thereof, the court of summary jurisdiction for the place in which the registered office of the trade union is situate, upon a complaint made by any person on behalf of such trade union may, by summary order, order such officer . . . Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said trade union . . . from proceeding by indictment against such party. . . ."

Held, that no order can be made under this section against any of the persons therein named for "wilfully withholding" unless it be proved that there was fraud or criminality in the wilfully withholding.

He refused to pay the fare demanded of him on the second tramcar.

Held, that the contract of carriage had been determined by the passenger's act, and that he was liable to be convicted for travelling on the second car without paying his fare.—BASTAPLE v. METCALFE, K.B.D.; [1906] 2 K. B. 288.

2. Difference—Arbitration—Dispute under special Act—Paving of street—Jurisdiction of court—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 33—Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. cclix.), s. 57, sub-section 5.—By section 57 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, if the tramway company fail to maintain and keep in good condition, to the satisfaction of the corporation (sub-section 5), the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation, the corporation might, if they thought fit, themselves at any time, after seven days' notice to the company, do the work necessary for the repair and maintenance of the road, and the expense reasonably incurred by the corporation in so doing shall be repaid to them by the company.

The corporation repaired the road at the junction of the paving laid by the tramway company, and claimed to recover the expense thereof from the company under the above section. The company denied their liability to pay it, and the corporation brought an action to recover the amount.

Held, that the difference between the corporation and the company must be referred to arbitration under section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action; and that, as the jurisdiction of the court was ousted, the objection to the jurisdiction might be taken for the first time in the Court of Appeal.—NORWICH CORPORATION v. NORWICH ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS CO., C.A., 572; [1906] 2 K. B. 119; 75 L. J. K. B. 636.

3. Purchase by local authority — Depôt outside district of local authority—"Suitable to and used . . . for the purposes of" the undertaking—Liability to purchase—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43.—By section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, it is provided that "Where the promoters of a tramway in a district are not the local authority, the local authority . . . may . . . by notice in writing require such promoters to sell, and thereupon such promoters shall sell to them their undertaking, or so much of the same as is within such district . . . and all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the promoters suitable to and used by them for the purposes of their undertaking within such district."

A local authority gave notice to a tramway company that they were required under the above section to sell to them so much of their works and undertaking as was within the district of the local authority.

The company were also the owners of a large depôt situated outside the boundary of the district, which was found by an arbitrator to be "used with and suitable to" the undertaking within the district.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the local authority could be compelled to purchase the depôt.

The words "within such district" qualify the word "undertaking," and not the words "lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the promoters."—MANCHESTER CARRIAGE AND TRAMWAYS CO. v. SWINTON URBAN COUNCIL, H.L.; [1906] A. C. 277; 93 L. T. 821.

4. Rating—General district rate—Land occupied by tramroad—Exemption as to three-fourths of net annual value—"Land used only as a railway"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, sub-section 1 (b)—Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramroad Acts, 1896 and 1898 (59 & 60 Vict. c. cxlvii.; 61 & 62 Vict. c. cl.).—By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 211, sub-section 1 (b), "the occupier of any land used only as a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament, for public conveyance, shall be assessed"—to general district rates—"in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net annual value thereof."

A company, incorporated by Act of Parliament for the purpose of making and working a tramroad and tramway, under the powers of their Act, constructed a tramway through the streets of a town, and at the end of this tramway and connected therewith they constructed a tramroad across country on land which was their own property, having been acquired by them for that purpose under their statutory powers. The tramroad at the other end joined on to another tramway through a town, which was leased and worked by the company. The whole line—tramways and tramroad—was worked as one continuous route by the overhead electric system, and carriages could pass and passengers be conveyed from one end to the other without break. Certain provisions of the Railway Acts were incorporated and made applicable to the tramroad, which for those special purposes was "to be deemed to be a railway."

Held, that the tramroad was not a "railway," that the land occupied by the tramroad was not "used only as a railway" within the meaning of the section, and that the company were not entitled to be assessed to a general district rate at one-fourth part only of the net annual value.—BLACKPOOL AND FLEETWOOD TRAMROAD CO. v. THORNTON URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 94 L. T. 254.

TRANSVAAL, LAW of:—

Lease—Condition—Forfeiture—Lease exclusively for agricultural purposes—Sub-division for building purposes.—The respondents let land to the appellants' predecessors in title for ninety-nine years, and by the lease it was provided that the land was to be used exclusively for agricultural purposes, and was not to be sub-divided "in order to sell or lease such portion as stands for building purposes." In the event of the breach of any of the conditions the lease was to be null and void, and the lessors were to have the right to resume possession.

The appellants advertised the land for sale in eighty-five one-acre lots in accordance with a plan.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the lessors were entitled to treat the lease as forfeited, although the land had not in fact been sub-divided and conveyed to separate purchasers, and that their remedy was by ejectment and not by interdict.—SHORT v. TURFFONTEIN ESTATE, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 584; 74 L. J. P. C. 148; 93 L. T. 57.

TRESPASS:—

Injunction—Alleged highway—Existing user—Coast—Foreshore.—Although there may be failure to prove any public right of way recognized by law over the foreshore or the rough cliff paths leading to the sea, it does not follow that in an action for trespass by by the owner of the locus in quo, even where the defendants trespassed and broke down obstructions in assertion of their supposed rights, the court is bound or will, in the absence of good reason, grant an injunction.

The plaintiff owned part of the coast where there were paths leading to the sea, which had been for many years used by fishermen and others. Such user did no damage to the plaintiff, or interfere with any plans for building or development of the property. The plaintiff put obstructions upon these paths, which the defendants, in assertion of their supposed right of highway, broke down. The plaintiff brought an action claiming an injunction. The Attorney-General was not a party. The defendants failed to prove any public rights of way.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have an injunction, and that it was sufficient to give him nominal damages.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Appointment of new trustees—Personal representative of last surviving trustee appointing himself—Appointment invalid—Trustee Act. 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10, sub-section 1.—The testator appointed his wife and three sons to be the executors and trustees of his will. The last surviving trustee died in 1905, and the executors whom he appointed having renounced probate, his eldest son took out letters of administration to his father's estate and then appointed himself and his brother to be the trustees of the testator's estate under the powers conferred by section 10, sub-section 1, of the Trustee Act, 1893. There was no power to appoint new trustees under the original will.

Held, that the appointment was invalid, as the words of the section, "another person or other persons," meant some person other than the person appointing.—SAMPSON, RE, SAMPSON v. SAMPSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 342; [1906] 1 Ch. 435; 75 L. J. Ch. 302; 94 L. T. 241.

2. Breach of trust—Acting bonâ fide under legal advice—Trustee company—Victorian Trusts Act, 1901—Judicial Trustees Acts, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3—A joint stock company, acting as trustees for reward, paid over under legal advice part of a trust fund to the wrong parties.

Held, even assuming they acted honestly and reasonably, that they were therefore not exempt from making good the breach of trust, and that the Victorian Trusts Act, 1901 (similar to the English Act 59 & 60 Vict. c. 35, s. 3), which gave the court a judicial discretion in such cases, made no difference under the above circumstances. A trustee company receiving remuneration for its services is in a different position to a private trustee.—NATIONAL TRUSTEES, &c., CO. v. GENERAL FINANCE, &c., CO., P.C., 1; [1905] A. 3. Income tax—Duty of trustee to deduct income tax—Trustee and cestui que trust—Annuity—Liability to replace amounts paid in excess by not deducting the tax.—S. by will gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert and invest, to pay certain annuities out of the income and accumulate the residue of the income until the capital became divisible (or for twenty-one years) and subject thereto to hold capital and income in trust for his grandchildren in equal shares. The trustees invested the funds in such a manner that the income tax was always deducted before the income was paid to them. The successive trustees for over twenty years paid all the annuities in full without deducting income tax. Some of the trustees were also annuitants.

Held, that the trustees were liable to make good to the trust estate the amounts of income tax so over-paid to the annuitants.

Held, also, that section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, applied, and the liability of the trustees was limited to payments made within six years, except in the case of sums retained for their own annuities.—SHARP, IN RE, RICKETT v. RICKETT, Swinfen Eady, J.; [1906] 1 Ch. 793; 75 L. J. Ch. 458.

4. Investments—Nominal debentures under Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83)—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 1 (g); s. 5, sub-section 3; s. 50.—Trust funds were invested on a mortgage of rates executed by a corporation. The mortgage was a nominal debenture. The trustees under the will had not any express powers of investing in nominal debentures, but they were not expressly forbidden to do so by the instrument creating the trust.

Held, that section 5 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1893, extends only to trustees having express power in the instrument authorizing the investment, and is an enlargement of the express power, and not a further enlargement of the general powers conferred by section 1.

The nominal debenture was not an authorized investment.—TATTERSALL, RE, TOPHAM v. ARMITAGE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 603.

5. Maintenance of cestuis que trust by trustee—Verbal arrangement—Onus of proof.—In 1875 the defendant married a widow with four children, two sons and two daughters. She was possessed of property producing an income of between £2,000 and £3,000 per annum. She died in 1888, having by her will appointed the defendant sole executor and trustee, and bequeathed the residue of her estate upon trust in equal fourth shares, one being for each of the three younger children of her first marriage (namely, E. and W., the daughters, and C., one of the sons), and the other fourth for the defendant for life, with remainder to the only child of the marriage of the defendant with the testatrix. At the time of the death of the testatrix, her daughters E. and W. were of the ages of twenty-six and twenty-four respectively. The testatrix contemplated that they would, after her death, continue to reside with the defendant, which, in fact, they did—E. until her marriage in July, 1899, and W. until the defendant himself married again in May, 1901.

E. and W. brought an action against the defendant claiming an account of the income to which they were entitled under the will of the testatrix from the date of the testatrix's death. The defendant stated that shortly after the testatrix's death he made a verbal arrangement with E. and W. that in consideration of their contributing or permitting him to retain the whole of the income of their shares of the trust estate, he should bear the cost of their maintenance as members of his household, and pay or provide the money for the payment of their personal expenditure, including any cash that they might require.

Held, that the onus lay upon the defendant to make out that he brought home to the minds of the daughters that they were to pay for their maintenance; and that he had failed to discharge it.

VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Building scheme—Roadway—Power to vary plans—Dedication—Cul-de-sac.—The plaintiff purchased a plot of land subject to a building scheme. On the plan attached to the conveyance a roadway, leading up to a railway and adjoining the plaintiff's land, was shown as a vacant space. This road was used by the public. One of the conditions embodied in the building scheme was that the vendors reserved power to allow variations in the plans and conditions.

Held, first, that in these circumstances the plan alone did not amount to a representation that the road should always remain a road, and that a purchaser could not be restrained from building thereon; and, secondly, that, in absence of active dedication, mere user by the public was not sufficient evidence of dedication.

2. Condition of sale—Condition as to requisitions—Unwillingness to comply with requisition—Vendor's right to rescind.—A condition of sale empowering the vendor to rescind the contract in the event of his being unable to remove or comply with any objection or requisition made by the purchaser will not justify the vendor in exercising such power of rescission arbitrarily or without reasonable cause, and, in the event of the vendor purporting so to exercise it, the purchaser can enforce the contract. —QUINION v. HORNE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 344; [1906] 1 Ch. 596; 75 L. J. Ch. 293.

3. Condition of sale—Rescission—Misdescription—Right of compensation.—An arbitrary power to rescind a contract of sale is not given by a condition that gives a right to rescind in the event of the purchaser insisting on an objection or requisition as to title, with which the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply on the ground of expense. There must be a reasonable ground for the exercise of the power. So where a condition of sale provided that the sale shall not be annulled by reason of any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars, but that they shall form the subject of compensation, the purchaser will be entitled to compensation should the particulars give a description of the land that would include the minerals and mines under it, the fact that the mines and minerals are excepted being well known to the vendor.

The conveyance was made between the vendor of the one part, and "William Wray, of Laurel House, Highgate," of the other part, and the property was conveyed to William Wray in fee simple.

Held, that the legal estate passed by the conveyance to the four partners as joint tenants in fee simple.

Held, that the purchaser could be compelled in an action for specific performance to carry out the terms of the contract by executing the conveyance.

Held, also, that the purchaser, or a person deriving title under him with notice of the terms of the deed of conveyance, is bound in equity to give effect to the rights intended to be reserved, and may be restrained by injunction from interfering with their exercise by the persons in whose favour the reservation was agreed to be made. This is so, notwithstanding that such rights at the date of the deed of conveyance were merely rights de facto, and that, by reason of the unity of title to the dominant and servient tenements being in the vendor at the date of the conveyance, the rights had no existence in law.

It was sold subject to a condition that "if any purchaser shall take any objection or make any requisition which the vendors are advised not to remove or comply with . . . the vendors . . . shall be at liberty . . . to rescind the contract for sale upon such terms as the judge shall approve, and the purchaser . . . shall thereupon be entitled to receive back his deposit, and shall receive the same in discharge of all claims for costs or otherwise." The abstract when delivered disclosed a deed under which the vendors' predecessor in title had covenanted to erect almshouses, and also had covenanted that the land and the buildings to be erected thereon should not be used for any purpose whatsoever other than as almshouses.

Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged from his contract and to a return of his deposit by reason of misrepresentation, and that he was entitled to be paid his costs, charges, and expenses, including the costs occasioned by his bidding at the sale, notwithstanding the provisions of the condition.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1897—Rating of gas mains—Sewered or unsewered property.—By the Metropolitan Board of Works Act, 1897, the Melbourne Board of Works was authorized to levy rates upon the property in each municipal district on a higher scale if the property rated was "sewered" property than if it was "unsewered."

The respondents' gas mains were comprised in and separately valued in the valuations in force in the municipalities within which they were severed.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that, though the gas mains were necessarily connected with the gas works of respondents, which were "sewered" property, they could not themselves deemed to be "sewered" property and rated as such.

But (reversing the judgment of the court below), that, though they were in their nature incapable of being "sewered," they must be deemed to be "unsewered" property within the meaning of the Act, and could not be placed in a category by themselves and relieved of rates altogether.—MELBOURNE BOARD OF WORKS v. METROPOLITAN GAS CO., P.C.; [1905] A. WATER:—

Easement—Supply of house from reservoir—Reservoir held on yearly tenancy—House demised—General words in demise—Right to water.—By a lease made in 1880 the lessors demised to the lessee a dwelling-house, together with "all waters and watercourses, liberties, privileges, easements, and appurtenances thereto belonging or in anywise appertaining, or usually held and occupied therewith, or reputed to belong or be appurtenant thereto . . . " for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years from 1840 (except the last ten days of the term). At the date of the lease, and for eighteen years previously, the dwelling-house had received a water supply from iron pipes which conducted water from a reservoir held by the same lessors as lessees on a yearly tenancy. In 1885 the representatives of the lessors, who then held the yearly tenancy of the reservoir, became undertakers for the supply of water in the district under statutory powers, and in 1902, by another statute the undertaking, including the yearly tenancy of the reservoir, was transferred to the defendants, who threatened to cut off the supply of water if the plaintiff did not pay for the supply.

Held, that under the lease of 1880 a right to water flowing through the pipes passed to the lessee, and the fact that the lessors were only yearly tenants of the reservoir made no difference, and that the successors of the lessors in the water undertaking were bound so long as they continued to be yearly tenants of the reservoir.

WATERWORKS:—

Pumping—Abstraction of silt—Injury to adjoining owner—Interest on sum awarded.—Under statutory powers the defendants acquired a piece of land and had sunk a well or borehole on that land distant about 150 yards from the plaintiff's dwelling-house, and, prior to November, 1904, had been pumping large quantities of water from the well or borehole. The plaintiff alleged that by means of the pumping large quantities of silt had been extracted from under his house, and a settlement had been caused owing to the support being withdrawn, and great damage had been done to the house. In consequence of this, in November, 1904, he made a claim against the defendants for injurious affection, desiring that the amount of compensation should be decided by arbitration. The umpire found that the corporation had by their authorized working caused damage to the property of the plaintiff; that such damage was not occasioned by the abstraction of water only, but by the abstraction of water which carried with it silt from under the plaintiff's premises; that the weight of the buildings on the land had not caused the damage; and that the amount of the damage done to the plaintiff's property was £1,200; and, further, that the subsoil which lay directly under and formed the support of the plaintiff's land was a bed of wet running silt, which was drawn away by the pumping of the corporation. He therefore awarded the plaintiff £1,200, and the costs of the arbitration.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Held, further, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover interest on the sum and costs so awarded from the date of the demand for payment.—FLETCHER v. BIRKENHEAD CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 75 L. J. K. B. 183; 94 L. T. 18.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

Prosecution by inspector—"Consent" of local authority—General consent—Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 14.—It is not necessary under section 14 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1904, which provides that an inspector of weights and measures may, with the consent of the local authority, prosecute before a court of summary jurisdiction any information, complaint, or proceeding arising under that Act, that a separate consent be given by the local authority in each particular case; a general consent to their inspector to prosecute in such cases being sufficient.—TYLER v. FERRIS, K.B.D., 469; [1906] 1 K. B. 94; 75 L. J. K. B. 142; 93 L. T. 843.

WILL:—

1. Administration with will annexed—Absolute gift—Gift cut down by subsequent words—Gift of residue to another person—Life interest—Residuary legatee preferred to executor of executrix.—A testator made a will upon a printed form with holograph additions. By this will he bequeathed certain property to his wife "for her absolute use and benefit and after her death to come absolutely" to any person "to her and her heirs for ever." The wife was further appointed executrix.

Held, having regard to the terms of the whole will and the circumstances of the case, that the later words ought to prevail, and that t was the intention of the testator to give his wife a life interest only. Also that the later named person was, on the true construction of the will, the residuary legatee, and entitled as such to a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed as against the executor of the widow of the testator, who had been appointed executrix by her husband, but had died without having taken out probate.—LUPTON, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D.; [1905] P. 321; 75 L. J. P. 162; 94 L. T. 100.

2. Ambiguity—Admissibility of evidence of identification.—The testatrix appointed as executrix and legatee a person she described in her will as "my granddaughter," leaving a blank where the name should have been. At the date of the will and at the testatrix's decease the testatrix had three granddaughters.

The Court admitted evidence, the object of which was the identification of the person so intended, and admitted the will to probate.—HUBBUCK, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D., 16; [1905] P. 129; 74 L. J. P. 58; 92 L. T. 665.

3. Annuitant—Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital or income—Charges in respect of compensation fund—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 3.—Where part of a trust estate under a will consists of freehold beerhouses with on-licences, on which annual charges are imposed in respect of the compensation fund under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, and by reason of the deduction by the tenants from their rents of the proper proportion of such charges, the income of the trust estate becomes insufficient to pay in full an annuitant under the will, such annuitant is not entitled to have any part of such charges paid out of capital, but they must be borne by the income of the estate.—SMITH, RE, SMITH v. DODSWORTH, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 449; [1906] 1 Ch. 799; 75 L. J. Ch. 442; 94 L. T. 643.

4. Children—Invalid marriage—Bequest to future children—Public policy.—J. L. L. on the 21st of December, 1900, married his niece D. D. W. in Scotland.

On the 24th of December, 1902, J. L. L. made a will whereby he left a legacy of £500 to D. D. W. (otherwise known as D. D. L.), and gave his residuary estate to a trustee upon trust for sale and conversion, and directed the trustee to pay the income to D. D. W. (otherwise D. D. L) for her separate use for life without power of anticipation, and after her decease in trust for all her children living at his (the testator's) decease, who being sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, in equal shares. And if there should be no child of the said D. D. W. (otherwise D. D. L.), upon trust to pay the income to the testator's father for life, and after his decease to divide the residuary estate among the testator's next-of-kin.

D. D. W. had an infant daughter on the 15th of January, 1903, and the testator was informed of the fact. He died on the 27th of August, 1903.

Held, that as a will speaks from the death, a bequest to a woman's future illegitimate children born in the testator's lifetime and not defined by reference to paternity is not void for uncertainty nor contrary to public policy.—LOVELAND, RE, LOVELAND v. LOVELAND, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1906] 1 Ch. 542; 75 L. J. Ch. 314; 94 L. T. 336.

5. Codicil—Construction—Devise to father and children—Revocation—Extent of revocation—Acceleration of children's interests.—A testator devised freeholds upon trust (after events which had happened) as to one-fourth part for his son G. W. for life, and after his death (subject to a power of appointment to his widow, which was not exercised) for the children of G. W. equally; and as to the other three fourth parts upon trust for the other three sons of the testator respectively for life, and for their children, in manner corresponding with the trusts of the share of G. W. and his children. By a codicil reciting that he was dissatisfied with G. W. the testator revoked the gift "to or for the benefit of" G. W., and directed that every clause of his will purporting to entitle G. W. to any part of his estate should be construed, and the trusts thereof carried out, as if the name of G. W. had not appeared therein.

Held, that the words "for the benefit of" could be satisfied by other benefits given to G. W. by the will; that to revoke a gift by will the words of revocation must be plain; that the interests given by the will to the children of G. W. were not revoked; and that these interests were accelerated by the revocation of the interest of G. W.

Tabor v. Prentice, 32 W. R. 872, distinguished.—WHITEHORNE, RE, WHITEHORNE v. BEST, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 580; [1906] 2 Ch. 121; 75 L. J. Ch. 537; 94 L. T. 698.

6. Conditional bequest—Hereditaments—Condition to resettle—Money upon trust for investment in land.—A testator gave a life interest in his estate to his son upon the condition that he should resettle the "hereditaments subject to the limitations" of the will of testator's father within a year of testator's death. The son was tenant in tail of lands under the will of testator's father, part of which had been sold and was represented by money held upon trust for investment in land.

Held, that these moneys were "hereditaments" which must be resettled in order to comply with the directions in the will of the testator.

In re Duke of Cleveland's Settled Estates, [1893] 3 Ch. 244, followed.—GOSSELIN, RE, GOSSELIN v. GOSSELIN, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 193; [1906] 1 Ch. 120; 75 L. J. Ch. 88.

7. Construction—Bequest between the children of A. and B.—By her will the testatrix gave a moiety of certain property to be equally divided between the children of F. M., now of Leeds, and J. C., of New York, or their heirs. Both F. M. and J. C. were nephews of the husband of the testatrix, and were both alive and had children living at the death of testatrix, but F. M. had not then been for some years living with his family.

Held, that the gift was to the children of F. M. and to J. C. personally, and that the division was to be into moieties, one moiety going to the children of F. M. and the other moiety going to J. C.—WALBRAN, RE, MILNER v. WALBRAN, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 167; [1906] 1 Ch. 64; 75 L. J. Ch. 105; 93 L. T. 745.

8. Construction—Devise in strict settlement—Power to charge portions—Provision limiting amount to be charged—Form of provision—Common form at date of will.—By his will, made in 1860, a testator who died in 1863 devised his real estate in strict settlement, and empowered each person thereby made tenant for life, whether in possession or not, to charge the property with the payment of any annual sum not exceeding £1,000 by way of jointure, and with any sum not exceeding £20,000, for portions of younger children. The will then provided that the devised property should not by virtue of these powers at any one time be liable to the payment of more than the annual sum of £1,500 for jointures, and more than the principal sum of £30,000 for portions of younger children. Provisions similar to this were to be found in books of precedents published before the date of the will. One tenant for life died in 1872, having charged the property with £20,000 for portions; and another tenant for life died in 1874, having made the same charge. Both these sums of £20,000 were raised and paid. In 1890 a third tenant for life, who never came into possession, died, having also charged the property with £20,000 for portions. On a summons taken out to determine whether this third charge was a good exercise of the power and valid and effectual for the whole amount,

Held, that, the form of the provision having been the common form at the date of the will, the words "at any one time" must be construed as applying to the sum chargeable for portions as well as to the sum chargeable for jointures; and that the third charge of £20,000 therefore did not transfer the limitations imposed by the will in respect of portions, but was valid and effectual for the whole amount.—BECKETT, RE, BETHELL v. GRIMTHORPE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 93 L. T. 746.

9. Construction—Gift to class attaining twenty-one—Gift over in the event of death without leaving any children surviving—Death of surviving child in infancy—Vested or contingent gift—Intestacy.—A testatrix by her will gave all her property in trust for her children, who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under that age. In the event of her death "without leaving any children surviving" her, she gave the property to her brothers and sisters. The testatrix left one child surviving her who died an infant.

Held, that the infant child did not take a vested interest at birth, and that, there being no reason for construing the words "without leaving any children" as meaning "without leaving any such children," the gift over also failed, and there was an intestacy.

Kidman v. Kidman, 40 L. J. Ch. 359, 19 W. R. Dig. 125, dissented from on the second point.—EDWARDS, RE, JONES v. JONES, C.A., 446; [1906] 1 Ch. 570; 75 L. J. Ch. 321; 94 L. T. 593.

10. Construction—Rule in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth—Life rent—Property given to wife for life—Optional power to sell given to life tenant—Intention for enjoyment in specie.—A testator who was at his decease in 1901 entitled to freeholds and leasehold houses, held at a ground-rent and let to weekly tenants, for a term of which thirty-nine years was unexpired, after bequeathing legacies, gave to his widow a life rent of all his property with power to sell and reinvest the proceeds on good security, after her death his property to be divided amongst his children.

Held, that although no indication of the testator's intention could be drawn from the use of the expression "life rent," which merely indicated the testator's intention to give his widow a life interest in his property, yet that, according to the rule in In re Pitcairn, Brandreth v. Colvin, 73 L. T. Rep. 430, [1896] 2 Ch. 199, the optional power of sale given to the widow, the life tenant, furnished sufficient indication of the testator's intention that she should enjoy his leasehold property in specie to exclude the operation of the rule of conversion in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137.—BENTHAM, RE, PEARCE v. BENTHAM, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 94 L. T. 307.

11. Devise to children born in the testator's lifetime—Divesting clause—Child en ventre sa mère.—Primâ facie, in the absence of sufficiently weighty considerations to the contrary, for the purposes of devolution of property in connection with intestacies or wills, no distinction ought to be drawn between a child born at a particular time and a child en ventre sa mère at that time and subsequently born alive. This rule applies generally and not merely in cases where it is for the benefit of the child.

Blasson v. Blasson, 13 W. R. 113, is overruled on this point, and cannot be supported except on the ground that the language of the particular will there in question prevented the application of the general principle above stated.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J. (53 W. R. 508, [1905] 2 Ch. 301), reversed.—VILLAR v. GILBEY, C.A., 473; [1906] 1 Ch. 583; 75 L. J. Ch. 308; 94 L. T. 424.

12. Discretionary trust—Remoteness.—A testator gave property to his trustees and directed them to apply the annual income, or any part thereof, "in such proportions and generally in such manner as to my said trustees in their absolute discretion should seem best for the support of my son A. B. and his wife and children, or any of them," or to accumulate the same in their like discretion for the benefit of the children of his son who should become entitled to the capital of the property under the trust thereinafter contained, and subject to the discretionary trust, he directed his trustees to pay the income to his son and his son's widow, and after their deaths to stand possessed of the capital for the son's children, as therein mentioned.

Held, that if the discretionary trust was not limited to the lifetime of the son, it was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities.

But, held, that upon the true construction of the will the trust was limited to the lifetime of the son.

13. Illegitimate child—"Children belonging to her."—A spinster bequeathed property in trust for all the children who might belong to her at her death. She died without having been married leaving an illegitimate child born in 1878.

Held, that the illegitimate child took under the will.—FROGLEY, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D., 48; [1905] P. 137; 74 L. J. P. 72; 92 L. T. 429.

14. Illegitimate testator—Gift to "all my nephews and nieces"—Some named—Gift to "my brother A. and my sisters B., C., D., and E."—Children of unnamed sister.—An illegitimate testator left the residue of his property, subject to his wife's life estate, in trust for his brother A. and his sisters B., C., D., and E., the income of A.'s share to be paid to him for life, and on his death, in the events that happened, the principal to go "equally amongst all my nephews and nieces then living." Like provision with regard to D.'s share. There being amongst others also reputed nephews and nieces by a reputed sister of the testator who was not mentioned in the will, it was Held, applying Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, 6 H. L. 265, that, in the absence of legitimate brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces, all the reputed nephews and nieces took, although some reputed brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces only had been mentioned in the will.—CORSELLIS, RE, FREEBORN v. NAPPER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 536; 75 L. J. Ch. 607.

15. Investment clause — "Any corporation or company, municipal, commercial, or otherwise"—Company formed or registered in the United Kingdom, but carrying on business abroad—Company formed or registered abroad.—A will authorized trustees to invest in the securities of "any corporation or company, municipal, commercial, or otherwise."

Held, (1) that the clause authorized investments in the securities of (a) any corporation or company formed or registered in the United Kingdom, though carrying on business abroad; and (b) any corporation or company formed or registered outside the United Kingdom; (2) that the expression "company" is not limited to incorporated associations.—STANLEY, RE, TENNANT v. STANLEY, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 103; [1906] 1 Ch. 131; 75 L. J. Ch. 56; 93 L. T. 661.

16. Legacy—Debt owed by testatrix to legatee—Satisfaction.—A testatrix bequeathed a legacy to a sister to whom she owed money at the time of her death. The amount of the legacy exceeded the amount of the debt. The sister, as an executrix, retained a sum sufficient to satisfy the debt with interest in addition to the legacy.

Held, that the legacy was in satisfaction of the debt.—RATTENBERRY, RE, RAY v. GRANT, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 311; [1906] 1 Ch. 667; 75 L. J. Ch. 304; 94 L. T. 475.

17. Legacy—Direction to pay legacy "six years after my decease"—Death of beneficiary before time for payment—Lapse.—A testator declared that his trustees should stand seised and possessed of his residuary personalty and realty, upon trust to retain legacies to themselves, and to "pay the following legacies: To my brother, G. E., the annual sum of £50 for the term of five years from my decease, and the legacy of £1,000 six years after my decease." The testator died on the 6th of July, 1900, and G. E. on the 9th of May, 1903.

Held, that, there being no gift except in this direction to pay, everything depended upon the expiration of six years, and that, G. E. not having survived this period after the testator's death, his estate did not take the £1,000.—EVE, RE, BELTON v. THOMPSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 93 L. T. 235.

18. Legacy—Specific gift—Ademption—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 4.—A testator by his will bequeathed the interest on his money invested in a certain security to his wife for her life. During the testator's life the security in question, which was held by the testator at the date of his will, was taken by a statutory authority and a new security given in its stead.

Held, that the new security held by the testator at the date of death did not pass under the bequest, the will speaking from the death.—SLATER, RE, SLATER v. SLATER, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 602.

19. Mistake — Legacy — Advance to legatee to be brought into hotchpot—Erroneous statement of fact—Account.—A testator, by his will, left his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his wife during her life or widowhood, and at her death or remarriage to divide the same amongst his children living at her death or remarriage, and the issue of deceased children in equal shares per stirpes. The will contained a recital that the testator had advanced to three of his sons respectively certain specified amounts, and a direction that parts of the amounts so specified should be brought into hotchpot, or so much thereof as remained unpaid at the death or remarriage of testator's wife. In the case of one of the sons the amount of the advance was incorrectly stated and in excess of the fact.

Held, that the son was only bound to account for such amount as had actually been advanced to him by the testator.—KELSEY, RE, WOOLLEY v. KELSEY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 136; [1905] 2 Ch. 465; 74 L. J. Ch. 701; 93 L. T. 662.

20. "Moneys owing"—Money on deposit at bank—Payable after notice—Bearing interest.—A gift in a will of moneys owing to the testator includes money standing in the testator's name on deposit account at a bank and bearing interest, whether such money is capable of being withdrawn on demand or only after seven days' notice.—DERBYSHIRE, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 135; [1906] 1 Ch. 135; 75 L. J. Ch. 95; 94 L. T. 138.

21. Name and arms clause—Forfeiture clause—Construction.—E. D., the widow of a peer, on becoming entitled under the terms of a will to settled estate, was required by a clause in the will, within a year of becoming so entitled, to take certain surnames and arms, and to use such surnames in all deeds and writings to which she should be a party or which she should sign, and upon all other occasions. In the event of her refusing or neglecting to take or use such surnames or arms as aforesaid she was to forfeit her interest. E. D. took the surnames and arms in accordance with the will, but neglected to use the assumed surnames in social and ordinary correspondence.

Held, that the period of a year applied only to the taking of the names and arms, and that neglect to use the same after the expiration of that period would involve a forfeiture; but that the clause in the will only required the use of the assumed surnames on formal occasions on which the use of a surname was customary, and that forfeiture was not incurred by neglecting to use them in social and ordinary correspondence.—DRAX, RE, DUNSANY v. SAWBRIDGE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 418; 75 L. J. Ch. 317; 94 L. T. 611.

22. Omission—Miscopying—Omission in will supplied by inference.—Where upon the construction of a will it is clear that words have been omitted from the will, owing to its having been miscopied, the court will supply the necessary words, where it can be inferred from other parts of the will what the testator intended should be inserted.

Dictum of Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73, approved.—PHILLIPS v. RAIL, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 517.

23. Pictures—Use and enjoyment—Letting furnished flat.—A testator gave his pictures to trustees upon trust to permit L. W. to have the use and enjoyment thereof during her life.

L. W. had some of the pictures in a flat, which she let furnished for a short time.

Marshall v. Blew, 2 Atk. 217, followed.—WILLIAMSON, RE, MURRAY v. WILLIAMSON, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 94 L. T. 813.

24. Subsequent gift by codicil—Gift "in addition" to prior gift.—A testator by a codicil to his will gave a legacy of £1,000 to a class, and by a subsequent codicil gave £50 to each of the class "so that each receives £100." Each member of the class received more than £100 under the original gift.

Held, that the subsequent bequest was a clear gift to each member of the class which was not cut down by the words which followed.—SEGELCKE, RE, ZIEGLER v. NICOL, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 624; 75 L. J. Ch. 494.

25. Substitution—Gift to issue of deceased children—Son dead at date of will leaving children.—A testator by his will, after giving certain legacies to the children of a deceased son, A. W., gave the residue of his estate upon trust "for all or any of my children (except one son R.) who shall be living at my death." This clause was immediately followed by a proviso that in case "any one or more of my children (other than R.) shall predecease me, leaving any child or children living at my death, then such child or children of my deceased child (other than R.) shall take, and if more than one in equal shares, the share which his, her, or their parent would have taken if such were living and over the age of twenty-one at my death."

Held, that the words "shall predecease me" must be read in their strict grammatical sense, and that the children of A. W., who was dead at the date of the will, did not take under the proviso.—GORRINGE, RE, GORRINGE v. GORRINGE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 267; [1906] 1 Ch. 319; 75 L. J. Ch. 116; 93 L. T. 831.
